

Primer

Categorical Approach

Prepared by the Office of the General Counsel

DISCLAIMER

The Commission's legal staff publishes this document to assist in understanding and applying the sentencing guidelines. The information in this document should not be considered definitive or comprehensive. In addition, the information in this document does not necessarily represent the official position of the Commission on any particular issue or case, and it is not binding on the Commission, the courts, or the parties in any case. To the extent this document includes unpublished cases, practitioners should be cognizant of Fed. R. App. P. 32.1, as well as any corresponding rules in their jurisdictions.

Want to learn more about relevant statutes, case law, and guidelines on a specific topic? The Commission's legal staff offers a series of primers to assist in understanding and applying the sentencing guidelines on the following topics—

- Aggravating and Mitigating Role Adjustments
- Antitrust Offenses
- Categorical Approach
- Offenses Involving Commercial Sex Acts and Sexual Exploitation of Minors
- Computer Crimes
- Crime Victims' Rights
- Criminal History
- Departures and Variances
- Drug Offenses
- Economic Crime Victims
- Fines for Organizations
- Firearms Offenses
- Immigration Offenses
- Intellectual Property Offenses
- Loss Calculation under §2B1.1
- Relevant Conduct
- Retroactive Guideline Amendments
- RICO Offenses
- Robbery Offenses
- Selected Offenses Against the Person and VICAR
- Sexual Abuse and Failure to Register Offenses
- Supervised Release

Learn more at <https://www.ussc.gov/guidelines/primers>.

UNITED STATES SENTENCING COMMISSION

One Columbus Circle, N.E.
Suite 2-500, South Lobby
Washington, DC 20002-8002
T: (202) 502-4500
F: (202) 502-4699
www.ussc.gov ||  @theusscgov

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. INTRODUCTION 1

II. THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH: ORIGIN AND APPLICATION 1

 A. Origin of the Categorical Approach and Modified Categorical Approach..... 2

 B. Basic Application Steps 4

 1. Identify the Relevant Federal Definition..... 4

 a. “Force” or “elements” clauses 5

 b. “Enumerated offenses” clauses 7

 c. Drug offense provisions 9

 2. Identify the Elements of the Defendant’s Prior Conviction..... 10

 a. Divisible and indivisible statutes..... 10

 b. Determining divisibility..... 11

 c. Remaining uncertainty 13

 3. Compare the Prior Conviction to the Federal Definition..... 13

III. WHERE THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH IS APPLIED 15

 A. Statutes Where Courts Have Applied the Categorical Approach 15

 1. 18 U.S.C. § 924(e) (Armed Career Criminal Act)..... 16

 2. 18 U.S.C. §§ 921(a)(33)(A) (Misdemeanor Crime of Domestic Violence) and 922(g)(9) (Unlawful Possession of a Firearm)..... 17

 3. 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) (Use of a Firearm During a Crime of Violence or Drug Trafficking Offense) 18

 4. 18 U.S.C. § 16 (Crime of Violence Defined)..... 19

 5. 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251; 2252; 2252A (Prior Sex Offense Convictions) 19

 6. Drug Offenses 21

 7. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1959, 1961 (Violent Crimes in Aid of Racketeering Activity (VICAR) and Racketeering (RICO)) 21

 B. Guidelines Where Courts Have Applied the Categorical Approach 22

 1. Sections 4B1.1 and 4B1.2 (Career Offender Guideline and Definitions) 23

 2. Section 2L1.2 (Illegal Reentry)..... 24

 3. Section 7B1.1 (Grade of Violations) 25

IV. CIRCUIT ISSUES 27

 A. Inchoate Offenses..... 27

 1. Application Note 1 to USSG §4B1.2 27

 2. Conspiracy and Attempt Offenses..... 28

 a. Conspiracy 28

 b. Attempt..... 30

B.	Differences in Breadth of the ACCA's and §4B1.2's Drug Offense Provisions	30
1.	"Involving" v. "Prohibits"	31
2.	Conduct or Generic Offenses	31
3.	Offers to Sell a Controlled Substance.....	33
C.	"Controlled Substance"	34

I. INTRODUCTION

Various statutes and guidelines subject defendants to enhanced punishment if such defendants have applicable instant and/or prior convictions for a violent crime or a serious drug offense. Courts employ the categorical approach and the modified categorical approach to determine whether a conviction qualifies as a predicate offense for purposes of such enhanced penalties. This primer provides a general overview of selected statutes, sentencing guidelines, and case law involving application of the categorical approach. Although this primer identifies some of the key cases and concepts related to the categorical approach, it is not a comprehensive compilation of authority nor intended to be a substitute for independent research and analysis of primary sources.

II. THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH: ORIGIN AND APPLICATION

In 1990, the Supreme Court established the “categorical approach” in Taylor v. United States,¹ and subsequently created the “modified categorical approach” in Shepard v. United States,² to determine whether a prior conviction qualifies as a “violent felony” or a “serious drug offense” for purposes of a sentencing enhancement under the Armed Career Criminal Act (“ACCA”).³ The ACCA imposes a 15-year mandatory minimum penalty on defendants convicted of a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) (prohibiting certain classes of persons from trafficking, receiving or possessing any firearm or ammunition) who have three or more prior felony convictions, committed on different occasions, for a “violent felony” or a “serious drug offense,” or both.⁴

Since then, courts have applied the categorical approach and modified categorical approach to other statutes to determine whether an instant or prior offense qualifies as a predicate offense for purposes of establishing criminal liability or applying certain sentencing enhancements.⁵ Although the guidelines do not require use of the categorical approach, courts also have applied the categorical approach and modified categorical approach to determine whether an instant and/or prior conviction is a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense” for purposes of the career offender enhancement at

¹ 495 U.S. 575 (1990).

² 544 U.S. 13 (2005).

³ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e).

⁴ Id.

⁵ See 18 U.S.C. §§ 16 (defining “crime of violence”), 924(c)(2), (c)(3) (defining “crime of violence” and “drug trafficking crime”); see also 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) (defining “aggravated felony” for purposes of deportation and removal pursuant to federal immigration law).

§§4B1.1 (Career Offender) and 4B1.2 (Definitions of Terms Used in Section 4B1.1) and other guidelines discussed herein.⁶

The categorical approach is an analysis that looks to the statutory elements of an offense, rather than the facts of a defendant’s conduct in committing the underlying offense, when determining the nature of a predicate conviction. To do so, courts evaluate the text of the statute of conviction with the aid of case law. When statutes criminalize multiple offenses, courts review a limited class of judicial documents for the sole purpose of determining a defendant’s particular offense of conviction.

The following sections summarize the origin of the categorical approach and modified categorical approach and describe the basic steps and principles used in applying the categorical approach.

A. ORIGIN OF THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH AND MODIFIED CATEGORICAL APPROACH

The Supreme Court established the categorical approach in Taylor v. United States. In Taylor, the Court held that the categorical approach requires courts to look only to the statute of conviction, rather than the particular facts underlying the conviction, to determine whether the offense meets the definition of a “violent felony” in the ACCA.⁷ To make this determination, courts compare the elements of the offense described in the statute of conviction to the definition in the ACCA to determine if the offense criminalizes the same or a narrower range of conduct than the definition, as required to serve as a predicate offense.⁸

In Shepard v. United States, the Court held that courts may use a “modified categorical approach” in cases where the statute of conviction describes both conduct that fits within the applicable definition and conduct that does not.⁹ In applying the modified categorical approach, courts look not only to the statute of conviction but also may look to a limited list of judicial sources to determine the elements of the offense of conviction: “the terms of the charging document, the terms of a plea agreement or transcript of colloquy between judge and defendant in which the factual basis for the plea was confirmed by the

⁶ While Taylor and subsequent Supreme Court cases regarding the categorical approach apply only to statutory provisions, shortly after Taylor, circuits began applying the categorical approach to the guidelines even though the guidelines do not require such an analysis.

⁷ Taylor, 495 U.S. at 600. The term “violent felony” includes any “crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year . . . involving the use or carrying of a firearm, knife, or destructive device that would be punishable by imprisonment for such term if committed by an adult, that—(i) has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another; or (ii) is burglary, arson, or extortion, involves use of explosives, or otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another.” 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2).

⁸ Taylor, 495 U.S. at 599.

⁹ 544 U.S. 13, 17–18 (2005).

defendant, or to some comparable judicial record of this information.”¹⁰ These documents are commonly referred to as “Shepard documents.”

Subsequently, in Descamps v. United States and Mathis v. United States, the Supreme Court held that courts may only apply the modified categorical approach if the court first determines that the statute of conviction is “divisible.”¹¹ For this threshold inquiry, courts must inquire if the statute lists alternative elements or, instead, lists alternative means of committing the offense.¹²

If the statute of conviction describes multiple crimes with alternative elements, the statute is “divisible,” and courts may use the modified categorical approach and Shepard documents to identify which of the alternative elements formed the basis of the defendant’s conviction. Courts may then determine whether the conviction meets the applicable definition.¹³ In contrast, if the statute describes a single crime and enumerates alternative means of committing that crime, the statute is “indivisible.” Thus, courts may not apply the modified categorical approach and instead must apply the categorical approach to determine if the means by which the defendant committed the crime meets the applicable definition.¹⁴

Because the categorical approach looks to the statutory elements of an offense when evaluating indivisible statutes, rather than the facts in the underlying case, courts may not look behind the “elements” of the statute of conviction to identify the “means” by which the defendant committed an offense.¹⁵ Instead, courts must look to the least serious conduct encompassed by the statutory elements to determine if an overbroad, indivisible statute qualifies as a predicate offense.¹⁶ Therefore, under Descamps and Mathis, if a statute of ¹⁰ Id. at 26.

¹¹ See Mathis v. United States, 579 U.S. 500, 517 (2016) (threshold inquiry is to determine whether a statute lists elements or means; if elements, the court reviews the record materials and compares the elements to the elements of the generic crime under the modified categorical approach); Descamps v. United States, 570 U.S. 254, 255 (2013) (Shepard documents may be used where the statute, by “listing potential offense elements in the alternative, renders opaque which element played a part in the defendant’s conviction”).

¹² Mathis, 579 U.S. at 517.

¹³ Descamps, 570 U.S. at 278; see, e.g., United States v. Jackson, 32 F.4th 278, 284–85 (4th Cir. 2022) (because 18 U.S.C. § 1111(a) lists alternative versions of first-degree murder, with each component separated by a semicolon (i.e., “[e]very murder perpetrated by poison [or] lying in wait . . . ; or committed in the perpetration of . . . any arson . . . ; or perpetrated as part of a pattern or practice of assault . . . ; or perpetrated from a premeditated design . . .”), the statute is divisible), cert. denied, 143 S. Ct. 1026 (2023).

¹⁴ Descamps, 570 U.S. at 258 (“[W]e hold that sentencing courts may not apply the modified categorical approach when the crime of which the defendant was convicted has a single, indivisible set of elements.”).

¹⁵ Mathis, 579 U.S. at 519 (Courts “may not ask whether the defendant’s conduct—his particular means of committing the crime—falls within the generic definition.”); Descamps, 570 U.S. at 278 (“The modified approach does not authorize a sentencing court to substitute such a facts-based inquiry for an elements-based one.”).

¹⁶ See Moncrieffe v. Holder, 569 U.S. 184, 190–91 (2013) (“Because we examine what the state conviction necessarily involved, not the facts underlying the case, we must presume that the conviction ‘rested upon conviction is indivisible and criminalizes a broader range of conduct than the applicable definition requires, the entire statute is categorically disqualified as a predicate offense, even if reliable records show that the conduct that formed the basis of the defendant's conviction otherwise would fall within such definition.¹⁷

B. BASIC APPLICATION STEPS

Applying the categorical approach can be best described as a three-step procedure, including identifying the relevant federal definition; identifying the elements of the prior conviction; and comparing the prior conviction to the federal definition.

1. Identify the Relevant Federal Definition

First, courts identify the definition of the statutory or guideline provision that triggers a higher penalty or enhanced sentence for a defendant's instant offense of conviction. For example, the ACCA provides for higher penalties for firearms offenses if the defendant was previously convicted of three or more "violent felonies" or "serious drug offenses" or both.¹⁸ The career offender guideline at §4B1.1 provides for higher offense levels and a higher criminal history category for defendants who have two or more prior convictions for a "crime of violence" or a "controlled substance offense."¹⁹

As discussed below, many federal statutes and guidelines contain definitions that use similar terms. Because courts typically interpret similar terms in the same way, courts have used the categorical approach and case law interpreting a clause in one definition (e.g., the "force" or "elements" clause) to also interpret the same category of clause in another definition.²⁰

[nothing] more than the least of th[e] acts' criminalized, and then determine whether even those acts are encompassed by the generic federal offense." (internal citations omitted)).

¹⁷ See Descamps, 570 U.S. at 261 ("But if the statute sweeps more broadly than the generic crime, a conviction under that law cannot count as an ACCA predicate, even if the defendant actually committed the offense in its generic form.").

¹⁸ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e).

¹⁹ U.S. SENT'G COMM'N, Guidelines Manual, §§4B1.1, 4B1.2 (Nov. 2021) [hereinafter USSG]. Other guidelines in the Guidelines Manual reference §§4B1.1 and 4B1.2 and their commentary to define these terms. See, e.g., USSG §§2K1.3 (Unlawful Receipt, Possession, or Transportation of Explosive Materials; Prohibited Transactions Involving Explosive Materials), 2K2.1 (Unlawful Receipt, Possession, or Transportation of Firearms or Ammunition; Prohibited Transactions Involving Firearms or Ammunitions), 2S1.1 (Laundering of Monetary Instruments; Engaging in Monetary Transactions in Property Derived from Unlawful Activity), 7B1.1 (Classification of Violations (Policy Statement)).

²⁰ E.g., United States v. Harris, 853 F.3d 318, 320 (6th Cir. 2017) ("This provision [§4B1.2(a)(1)], often called the 'elements clause,' mirrors the elements clause in the Armed Career Criminal Act, and we typically interpret them the same way."); United States v. Fritts, 841 F.3d 937, 940–42 n.4 (11th Cir. 2016) (because §4B1.2's force clause for a "crime of violence" and the ACCA's force clause for a "violent felony" are identical, "this Court often considers cases interpreting the language in the Sentencing Guidelines as authority in cases interpreting the language in the ACCA"); United States v. Smith, 775 F.3d 1262, 1267 (11th Cir. 2014) (interpreting the ACCA's definition of "serious drug offense" and §4B1.2's definition of "controlled substance

a. “Force” or “elements” clauses

A “force clause,” sometimes referred to as an “elements clause,” requires that the offense have an element of physical force against a person. For example, the ACCA defines a “violent felony” in part as a prior conviction that “has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another.”²¹ Section 4B1.2(a)(1) likewise defines a “crime of violence” as a felony offense that “has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another.”²²

In the context of the ACCA, the Supreme Court has held “physical force against another” means that the crime necessarily must involve violent force—that is, “force capable of causing physical pain or injury to another person.”²³ In so holding, the Court rejected the common law definition of “force,” which could be satisfied by even the slightest offensive touching, because it did not fit the context of the ACCA.²⁴ The Supreme Court has since further clarified that in the context of the ACCA, “‘force capable of causing pain or injury,’ includes the amount of force necessary to overcome a victim’s resistance.”²⁵ However, the Court previously held that a “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence,” as defined by a force clause in 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A) to include an offense that “has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon,” could be supported by “the degree of force that supports a common-law battery conviction.”²⁶

In the context of 18 U.S.C. § 16(a), a statute providing that a “crime of violence” means an offense that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another, the Supreme Court has held in Leocal v. Ashcroft that accidental or negligent conduct does not constitute the “use” of force in section 16(a).²⁷ The Court explained that the word “use” joined in context with the offense” similarly); United States v. Woods, 576 F.3d 400, 403–04 (7th Cir. 2009) (because the language is identical in the ACCA’s “violent felony” and §4B1.2’s “crime of violence” definitions, “we therefore refer to the ACCA and the career offender provisions of the Guidelines interchangeably”).

²¹ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B)(i) (emphasis added).

²² USSG §4B1.2(a)(1) (emphasis added).

²³ Johnson v. United States, 559 U.S. 133, 140 (2010).

²⁴ Id. at 139; see also id. at 141 (“It is significant, moreover, that the meaning of ‘physical force’ the Government would seek to import into this definition of ‘violent felony’ is a meaning derived from a common-law misdemeanor.”).

²⁵ Stokeling v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 544, 552, 554–55 (2019) (“force capable of causing physical pain or injury” in the force clause of the ACCA “does not require any particular degree of likelihood or probability that the force used will cause physical pain or injury; only potentiality” (citation omitted)); see also United States v. Alvarez, 60 F.4th 554, 564 (9th Cir. 2023) (discussing the definition of “capable” in Johnson and Stokeling); Johnson v. United States, 24 F.4th 1110, 1119 (7th Cir. 2022) (discussing the definition of “physical force” in Johnson and Stokeling).

²⁶ United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 168 (2014); 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A).

²⁷ 543 U.S. 1, 9 (2004).

phrase “against the person or property of another” requires “active employment.”²⁸ Subsequently, in Voisine v. United States, the Court determined that a “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence,” as defined in the force clause in 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A), could involve the use of force, even with a mens rea of recklessness, finding that that section does not require the force be employed against the person or property of another.²⁹ Thereafter, circuit courts split as to whether a mens rea of recklessness could satisfy the ACCA’s force clause.³⁰ In 2021, in Borden v. United States, the Supreme Court resolved this circuit split and determined that the ACCA’s force clause requires purposeful or knowing conduct, not mere recklessness.³¹ Circuit courts subsequently have applied the reasoning of Borden to the materially identical force clauses in 18 U.S.C. § 16(a), 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A), 18 U.S.C. § 3559(c)(2)(F)(ii), and the career offender guideline definition at §4B1.2(a).³²

Although force clauses are similar across different statutes and guidelines (and thus courts often discuss them interchangeably), one notable difference among some force clause definitions is the inclusion of physical force against a person or against property, instead of solely against a person. For instance, 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A) (defining in part the term “crime of violence”) requires that the force be used “against the person or property of another,” while §4B1.2(a)(1) requires that the force be used “against the person of another.”³³ As a result, a statute of conviction criminalizing force against property qualifies as a predicate offense under section 924(c) but does not qualify under §4B1.2(a)(1).

By way of example, offenses under 18 U.S.C. § 1951 (Hobbs Act robbery) can be committed through force or threats of force against a person or against property.³⁴ “Robbery” is defined at subsection 1951(b)(1) to include “the unlawful taking or obtaining of personal property from the person or in the presence of another, against his will, by means of actual or threatened force, or violence . . . to his person or property.”³⁵ Every court of appeals to have addressed the issue has held that Hobbs Act robbery categorically

²⁸ Id.

²⁹ 579 U.S. 686, 692 (2016).

³⁰ Borden v. United States, 141 S. Ct. 1817, 1823 (2021) (plurality opinion) (discussing the circuit split).

³¹ Id. at 1825; see also id. at 1835 (Thomas, J., concurring in the judgment). The plurality explained that “Voisine thus focused exclusively on the word ‘use’” because 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A) “lacks the ensuing phrase ‘against the person of another.’” Id. at 1833. And it is the phrase “‘against the person of another,’ when modifying the ‘use of physical force,’ [which] introduces that action’s conscious object,” and thus excludes reckless conduct. Id.

³² See, e.g., United States v. Begay, 33 F.4th 1081, 1093 (9th Cir.) (section 924(c)(3)(A)), cert. denied, 143 S. Ct. 340 (2022); United States v. Stoglin, 34 F.4th 415, 418–19 (5th Cir. 2022) (section 3559(c)(2)(F)(ii)); United States v. Gomez, 23 F.4th 575, 577 (5th Cir. 2022) (section 16(a)); United States v. Quinones, 16 F.4th 414, 420 (3d Cir. 2021) (guidelines); United States v. Martin, 15 F.4th 878, 883 (8th Cir. 2021) (guidelines), cert. denied, 142 S. Ct. 1432 (2022); United States v. Ash, 7 F.4th 962, 963 (10th Cir. 2021) (guidelines).

³³ 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A); USSG §4B1.2(a)(1).

³⁴ 18 U.S.C. § 1951.

³⁵ 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b)(1).

qualifies as a “crime of violence” under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) because that provision includes force against property or a person.³⁶ However, every court of appeals to have addressed the issue has held that Hobbs Act robbery is not a categorical match with the force clause at §4B1.2.³⁷ To address these different approaches, in 2023, the Commission published an amendment to §4B1.2 to add a definition of “robbery” at §4B1.2(e) that mirrors the definition of the term at 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b)(1).³⁸

b. “Enumerated offenses” clauses

Terms like “violent felony” or “crime of violence” also can be defined by a list of specific offenses whose generic elements qualify as a predicate offense.³⁹ For example, the ³⁶ See United States v. García-Ortiz, 904 F.3d 102, 107–09 (1st Cir. 2018); United States v. Hill, 890 F.3d 51, 60 (2d Cir. 2018); United States v. Walker, 990 F.3d 316, 325–26 (3d Cir. 2021), vacated on other grounds, 142 S. Ct. 2858 (2022); United States v. Mathis, 932 F.3d 242, 266 (4th Cir. 2019); United States v. Buck, 847 F.3d 267, 275 (5th Cir. 2017); United States v. Gooch, 850 F.3d 285, 291–92 (6th Cir. 2017); United States v. Fox, 878 F.3d 574, 579 (7th Cir. 2017); United States v. Jones, 919 F.3d 1064, 1072 (8th Cir. 2019); United States v. Dominguez, 954 F.3d 1251, 1260–61 (9th Cir. 2020) (citing United States v. Mendez, 992 F.2d 1488, 1491 (9th Cir. 1993)), vacated on other grounds, 142 S. Ct. 2857 (2022); United States v. Melgar-Cabrera, 892 F.3d 1053, 1066 (10th Cir. 2018); United States v. St. Hubert, 909 F.3d 335, 345 (11th Cir. 2018), abrogated on other grounds by United States v. Taylor, 142 S. Ct. 2015 (2022).

³⁷ See United States v. Chappelle, 41 F.4th 102, 109–12 (2d Cir. 2022); United States v. Scott, 14 F.4th 190, 198 n.7 (3d Cir. 2021); United States v. Green, 996 F.3d 176, 184 (4th Cir. 2021); United States v. Camp, 903 F.3d 594, 604 (6th Cir. 2018); Bridges v. United States, 991 F.3d 793, 801–02 (7th Cir. 2021); United States v. Prigan, 8 F.4th 1115, 1117 (9th Cir. 2021) (collecting cases); United States v. O’Connor, 874 F.3d 1147, 1158 (10th Cir. 2017); United States v. Eason, 953 F.3d 1184, 1194–95 (11th Cir. 2020). The Commission relied on Stokeling v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 544, 555 (2019) (clarifying in the ACCA, “force capable of causing pain or injury,” includes the amount of force necessary to overcome a victim’s resistance”), to conclude such definition “would eliminate potential litigation over the meaning of actual or threatened force.” Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023). The amendment will go into effect on November 1, 2023, absent congressional action to the contrary. See also infra note 38 and accompanying text.

³⁸ See Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023). The amendment will go into effect on November 1, 2023, absent congressional action to the contrary.

³⁹ Many statutory provisions also include or included now-defunct residual clauses, which were catchall provisions—i.e., “or otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another” in 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B)(ii)—to define applicable terms. In Johnson v. United States, 576 U.S. 591 (2015), the Supreme Court invalidated the residual clause in 18 U.S.C. § 924(e) as unconstitutionally vague. However, Congress has not yet altered section 924(e) in response to Johnson. The Supreme Court also invalidated the residual clause in 18 U.S.C. § 16(b) in Sessions v. Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. 1204 (2018), and the residual clause in 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(B) in United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019). See also Hall v. United States, 58 F.4th 55, 60 (2d Cir. 2023) (Davis applies retroactively to cases on collateral review).

Separately, in 2016, the Commission promulgated an amendment that removed the residual clause from the “career offender” definition of a “crime of violence” at §4B1.2(a)(2). USSG App. C, amend. 798 (effective Aug. 1, 2016) (amending §4B1.2(a)(2) to, among other things, remove the residual clause in the definition of “crime of violence”). Before 2016, §4B1.2(a)(2) alternatively defined a “crime of violence” as an offense that is one of the enumerated offenses or “otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another.” See USSG §4B1.2(a)(2) (effective Nov. 1, 2015).

ACCA alternatively defines “violent felony” to include a felony which “is burglary, arson, or extortion, [or] involves the use of explosives.”⁴⁰ Section 4B1.2(a)(2) also provides an alternative definition of “crime of violence” by listing specific offenses: “is murder, voluntary manslaughter, kidnapping, aggravated assault, a forcible sex offense, robbery, arson, extortion, or the use or unlawful possession of a firearm described in 26 U.S.C. § 5845(a) or explosive material as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 841(c).”⁴¹

To determine what constitutes the “generic” version of an offense, courts have looked to a number of factors, including state penal codes and Congressional intent,⁴² related federal statutes,⁴³ the Model Penal Code,⁴⁴ Supreme Court and circuit case law,⁴⁵ criminal law treatises and legal dictionaries,⁴⁶ and definitions specifically provided in the

Although the Commission removed the §4B1.2 residual clause, the Supreme Court upheld the validity of §4B1.2’s residual clause, holding that the guidelines are not subject to a vagueness challenge due to their advisory nature. Beckles v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 886, 894–95 (2017). As a result, the now-excised residual clause in the career offender guideline remains valid for those defendants sentenced under the guidelines prior to August 2016. See United States v. Smith, 881 F.3d 954, 956 (6th Cir. 2018) (reaffirming a prior decision that a state robbery statute is a crime of violence under §4B1.2’s residual clause in light of Beckles); United States v. Jones, 878 F.3d 10, 14 (2d Cir. 2017) (holding, post-Beckles, that a state robbery statute qualified as a crime of violence under the career offender guideline’s residual clause). However, Beckles may not apply to sentences imposed when the guidelines were mandatory. See Shea v. United States, 976 F.3d 63, 81–82 (1st Cir. 2020); Cross v. United States, 892 F.3d 288, 291 (7th Cir. 2018). But see United States v. Carr, 946 F.3d 598, 600 n.3 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (discussing a circuit conflict regarding defendants’ ability to bring post-conviction challenges on a mandatory guidelines vagueness theory). Because residual clauses are no longer in effect, this primer does not address them further.

⁴⁰ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B)(ii) (emphasis added).

⁴¹ USSG §4B1.2(a)(2) (emphasis added). In 2023, the Commission published an amendment to §4B1.2 that added a definition of “robbery” and moved the definitions of “forcible sex offense” and “extortion” to a new subsection at §4B1.2(e). See Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023). The amendment will go into effect on November 1, 2023, absent congressional action to the contrary. See also supra note 36 and accompanying text.

⁴² See Quarles v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 1872, 1878 (2019) (a majority of state burglary laws proscribed remaining-in burglary when ACCA was enacted, showing that Congress likely intended generic burglary to include burglars who formed intent to commit a crime at any time while unlawfully remaining in a building or structure); United States v. Stitt, 139 S. Ct. 399, 406 (2018) (the majority of state burglary laws at the time of ACCA’s enactment covered vehicles adapted or customarily used for lodging); Esquivel-Quintana v. Sessions, 137 S. Ct. 1562, 1571–72 (2017) (at the time of the definition’s addition to the Immigration and Nationality Act, a significant majority of states set the age of consent at 16-years-old, supporting a generic definition of statutory rape where the victim is younger than 16).

⁴³ Esquivel-Quintana, 137 S. Ct. at 1570.

⁴⁴ See, e.g., United States v. Torres-Diaz, 438 F.3d 529, 536 (5th Cir. 2006) (The “primary source for the generic contemporary meaning of . . . [a category of offenses] is the Model Penal Code.”).

⁴⁵ See Quarles, 139 S. Ct. at 1877.

⁴⁶ See, e.g., United States v. Iniguez-Barba, 485 F.3d 790, 793 (5th Cir. 2007) (relying on Black’s Law Dictionary along with legislative history).

guidelines.⁴⁷ For offenses not developed in the common law, courts have looked at the plain, ordinary meaning of the statutory language,⁴⁸ including examining regular dictionaries.⁴⁹ Thus, whether the offense of conviction has the same title as an enumerated offense does not dispose of the issue.⁵⁰

c. Drug offense provisions

Terms such as “serious drug offense” in the ACCA and “controlled substance offense” in §4B1.2(b) target controlled substance offenses more serious than mere possession, such as distribution, manufacturing, and possession with intent to distribute or manufacture.⁵¹ The ACCA, for instance, defines a serious drug offense as an offense under specific federal statutes or “an offense under State law, involving manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute, a controlled substance” with a sentence of at least ten years.⁵² Section 4B1.2(b) defines a “controlled substance offense” as a federal or state offense with a maximum term of more than one year of imprisonment “that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute, or dispense.”⁵³

Notably, the ACCA’s serious drug offense provision differs from §4B1.2(b)’s “controlled substance offense” definition in several important respects. These differences include: (1) the ACCA’s requirement that state offenses have at least a ten-year statutory maximum, whereas §4B1.2 requires only that predicates be punishable by more than a ⁴⁷ USSG §4B1.2, comment. (n.1) (providing definitions for “forcible sex offense” and “extortion”). In 2023, the Commission amended §4B1.2 by moving, without change, the definitions from the commentary at Application Note 1 to the guideline in a new subsection at §4B1.2(e). See Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023). The amendment will go into effect on November 1, 2023, absent congressional action to the contrary.

⁴⁸ See, e.g., United States v. Alfaro, 835 F.3d 470, 474–75 (4th Cir. 2016) (looking at the plain and ordinary meaning of the guidelines’ language to determine whether a Maryland conviction is a “forcible sex offense” under §2L1.2); United States v. Ramirez-Garcia, 646 F.3d 778, 783 (11th Cir. 2011) (courts define a generic offense based on “the ordinary, contemporary, and common meaning of the statutory words” for offenses not developed in the common law (quoting United States v. Padilla-Reyes, 247 F.3d 1158, 1163 (11th Cir. 2001))).

⁴⁹ See, e.g., Padilla-Reyes, 247 F.3d 1163 (looking at Webster’s Third New International Dictionary, in addition to Black’s Law Dictionary, in order to define “sexual abuse of a minor” under its plain meaning that comports with common usage).

⁵⁰ Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 599 (1990).

⁵¹ See 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A) (definition of “serious drug offense”); USSG §4B1.2(b) (definition of “controlled substance offense”).

⁵² 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A)(i)–(ii).

⁵³ USSG §4B1.2(b). In 2023, the Commission published an amendment to §4B1.2 that amended the definition of “controlled substance offense” at §4B1.2(b). The amendment provides that a “controlled substance offense” includes offenses described in 46 U.S.C. § 70503(a) or (b). See Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023). The amendment will go into effect on November 1, 2023, absent congressional action to the contrary.

year of imprisonment; (2) the ACCA’s explicit inclusion of federal offenses under the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. § 801); and (3) the ACCA’s inclusion of state offenses involving the enumerated acts, whereas §4B1.2(b) requires the offense of conviction prohibits the enumerated acts, listed in each definition.⁵⁴ Notably, in Shular v. United States, the Supreme Court held the ACCA’s definition of a “serious drug offense” under section 924(e)(2)(A)(ii) lists unlawful conduct (akin to a force clause), not generic offenses (akin to an enumerated offense clause).⁵⁵

2. Identify the Elements of the Defendant’s Prior Conviction

Next, courts identify the elements of the state or federal statute underlying the defendant’s prior conviction. The key for this step is determining the crime of which the defendant was convicted. To determine the defendant’s crime, courts look only to the elements of the statute of conviction—that is, what necessarily is required to be proven for the defendant to be convicted of the crime.⁵⁶ Thus, courts examine only the text of the statute of conviction and case law interpreting the meaning of such statute at the time of the defendant’s conviction, as prior convictions may be decades-old and the statute or case law interpreting the statute may have changed.⁵⁷ The statute’s title is not determinative.⁵⁸

a. Divisible and indivisible statutes

If the statute of conviction is alternatively phrased, the court must determine whether the statute is divisible (listing multiple crimes comprised of different elements) or indivisible (listing one crime comprised of various factual means of commission).⁵⁹ An ⁵⁴ Compare 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A), with USSG §4B1.2(b). See also United States v. Jones, 15 F.4th 1288, 1293–94 (10th Cir. 2021) (noting textual differences between § 924(e)(2)(A) and §4B1.2(b)), cert. denied, 143 S. Ct. 268 (2022).

⁵⁵ 140 S. Ct. 779, 782 (2020) (“The ‘serious drug offense’ definition requires only that the state offense involve the conduct specified in the federal statute; it does not require that the state offense match certain generic offenses.”).

⁵⁶ Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 600 (1990) (courts are not permitted to consider the conduct of a defendant when applying the categorical approach, only the elements of the predicate statute of conviction).

⁵⁷ McNeill v. United States, 563 U.S. 816, 821 (2011) (“[W]hen determining whether a defendant was convicted of a ‘violent felony,’ we have turned to the version of state law that the defendant was actually convicted of violating.”).

⁵⁸ See Taylor, 495 U.S. at 588–89 (“Congress intended that the enhancement provision [at 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)] be triggered by crimes having certain specified elements, not by crimes that happen to be labeled ‘robbery’ or ‘burglary’ by the laws of the State of conviction”); United States v. Montanez, 442 F.3d 485, 492 (6th Cir. 2006) (“How a state titles its statutory provisions, however, is not determinative of what actual statute a defendant was convicted under for federal sentencing purposes.”); see also, e.g., In re Sealed Case, 548 F.3d 1085, 1089–90 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (comparing D.C. “robbery” definition with the generic definition).

⁵⁹ A statute can be both divisible and indivisible. See United States v. Hope, 28 F.4th 487, 499 & n.7 (4th Cir. 2022) (South Carolina drug statute is divisible as to drug conduct (i.e., “to manufacture, distribute, . . . or conspire to manufacture . . . or possess with the intent to manufacture . . . or purchase . . .”) but is indivisible element must be proven for conviction, establishing a distinct crime, while a means is a method of committing a crime that does not necessarily need to be proven for conviction under the statute.⁶⁰

When a statute is divisible, courts are permitted to use the modified categorical approach and examine select judicial documents, i.e., the Shepard documents, to determine which crime the defendant was convicted of committing. For example, the Fourth Circuit has held that 18 U.S.C. § 1513(b)(1), which criminalizes retaliating against a witness, is divisible because it has alternative elements: engaging in or threatening bodily injury, and engaging in or threatening damage to property.⁶¹ Therefore, where the Shepard documents revealed a defendant was convicted of the “bodily injury” variant, the Fourth Circuit examined only whether that variant met the applicable definition.⁶²

In contrast, when a statute is indivisible, courts may not use the modified categorical approach and therefore may not examine Shepard documents to determine whether the defendant’s offense of conviction is a predicate offense. For example, in Mathis v. United States, the Supreme Court held that Iowa’s burglary statute was indivisible despite setting out disjunctively “building, other structure, or vehicle” as possible sites of burglaries, because the Iowa Supreme Court had held these alternatives were different methods of committing one offense, rather than alternative elements of different offenses.⁶³ Thus, a lower court’s resort to the modified categorical approach was erroneous—the facts underlying the defendant’s conviction (i.e., whether what he burgled was a building, a structure, or a vehicle) were irrelevant.⁶⁴

b. Determining divisibility

The line between divisibility and indivisibility, however, is not always clear.⁶⁵ A statute’s listing of verbs or phrases in the disjunctive does not necessarily indicate it lists as to type “because the statute penalizes the ‘distribut[ion], [sale], purchase, manufacture or [the] unlawful[] possess[ion] with intent to distribute, a controlled substance’ ”(citation omitted)).

⁶⁰ Mathis v. United States, 579 U.S. 500, 504 (2016). The Court stressed that at a trial, elements “are what the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt to convict the defendant, and at a plea hearing, they are what the defendant necessarily admits when he pleads guilty.” Id. (internal citations omitted). The Court explained that facts, by contrast, are “mere real-world things—extraneous to the crime’s legal requirements They are ‘circumstance[s]’ or ‘event[s]’ having no ‘legal effect [or] consequence’: In particular, they need neither be found by a jury nor admitted by a defendant.” Id. (quoting Fact, Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014)).

⁶¹ United States v. Allred, 942 F.3d 641, 649–52 (4th Cir. 2019).

⁶² Id. at 652.

⁶³ Mathis, 579 U.S. at 517.

⁶⁴ Id. at 512–13.

⁶⁵ Descamps v. United States, 570 U.S. 254, 279 (2013) (Kennedy, J., concurring) (“[T]he dichotomy between divisible and indivisible state criminal statutes is not all that clear.”).

elements.⁶⁶ The Supreme Court has set forth several tools to help determine what constitutes means or elements. The first is whether the court presiding over the statute’s jurisdiction (e.g., the presiding state court, if a state statute is at issue) has held whether the statute comprises elements or means.⁶⁷ Second, the statutory text may resolve the inquiry, either by directly stating that the alternatives must be charged as elements or are illustrative means, or by imposing different punishments for the different alternatives, necessitating unanimous jury agreement as a matter of constitutional law.⁶⁸

If neither a presiding court decision nor the statutory text provides a clear answer, sentencing courts may “peek” at the record of the conviction itself for the limited purpose of determining whether the listed items are elements.⁶⁹ For example, if one count of an indictment and the corresponding jury instructions both charge a defendant with burgling a “building, structure, or vehicle,” then those documents indicate that each term is only a possible means of commission, not an element that the prosecutor must prove to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.⁷⁰ Notably, the Supreme Court has cautioned that record materials will not always clearly answer the divisibility question, and if they do not “speak plainly,” then they cannot satisfy “Taylor’s demand for certainty.”⁷¹

⁶⁶ Mathis, 579 U.S. at 506–07.

⁶⁷ Id. at 517 (noting that the Iowa Supreme Court had held that the Iowa statute in question comprises alternative methods of committing one offense, so that a jury need not agree on which method the defendant used to convict him).

⁶⁸ Id. In Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000), the Court held that, aside from the fact of a prior conviction, any fact increasing the statutory maximum for a penalty is constitutionally required to be submitted to a jury and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Importantly, while alternatives being subject to different penalties demonstrates they are elements rather than means, Apprendi does not demand that alternatives carrying the same penalty are necessarily means. The District of Columbia Circuit has stated that two statutory alternatives are distinct offenses if each has a different punishment, yet those two statutory alternatives also can be distinct offenses even if they do not have different punishments. United States v. Abu Khatallah, 41 F.4th 608, 633 (D.C. Cir. 2022) (per curiam) (citing Mathis, 579 U.S. at 518), cert. denied, No. 22-7065 (U.S. Mar. 22, 2023). The Third Circuit has stated that identical punishments for the alternatives “could indicate that the alternatives are means.” United States v. Aviles, 938 F.3d 503, 513 (3d Cir. 2019). The Second Circuit, while having previously noted that alternatives carrying the same penalty is in line with indivisibility, in Harbin v. Sessions, 860 F.3d 58, 65 (2d Cir. 2017), also has more recently held a statute divisible where the penalties for the alternatives were the same, in Chery v. Garland, 16 F.4th 980, 985–86 (2d Cir. 2021). The Sixth and Tenth Circuits, albeit in unpublished opinions, also have rejected the argument that alternatives must be means due to carrying the same punishment. United States v. Mjones, No. 20-8029, 2021 WL 4078002, at *7 (10th Cir. July 13, 2021); Banks v. United States, 773 F. App’x 814, 820 (6th Cir. 2019); United States v. Burtons, 696 F. App’x 372, 378 (10th Cir. 2017); see also United States v. Wilkins, 30 F.4th 1198, 1207 (10th Cir. 2022) (“The presence of the same punishment suggests characterization as means, but that suggestion isn’t dispositive”).

⁶⁹ Mathis, 579 U.S. at 518–19 (citations omitted).

⁷⁰ Id. at 517–18. The Court noted that conversely, an indictment and jury instruction that only reference one alternative term to the exclusion of others could indicate that the statute contains a list of elements, each one of which must be proven to a jury. Id. at 519.

⁷¹ Id. (quoting Shepard, 544 U.S. at 21). In Taylor v. United States, the Supreme Court cited three main factors in adopting a statutory-based categorical approach instead of a conduct-based one: (1) the language of section 924(e) indicates that Congress intended the sentencing court to determine if a defendant had been

c. Remaining uncertainty

Even if a statute is determined to be divisible, the Shepard documents still may not make clear which element the defendant was convicted of if, for example, the charging document lists multiple elements and the judgment offers no further clarification.⁷² When Shepard documents are ambiguous as to which element supported the conviction, the ambiguity is decided in the defendant's favor—thus, the court must assume the defendant committed the least culpable element (and the least culpable means of committing that element).⁷³

3. Compare the Prior Conviction to the Federal Definition

After identifying the relevant federal definition and the elements of the defendant's statute of conviction, the final step is to determine whether the statute of conviction categorically "matches" the definition at issue. Courts must assume, for purposes of comparison with the federal definition, that the defendant committed the least culpable conduct necessary to sustain a conviction under that statute.⁷⁴ A categorical match means that the least culpable method of violating the statute is no broader than (in other words, is narrower than or equivalent to) the relevant definition. If a statute reaches more conduct than the definition, then it is overbroad and categorically does not qualify.

As explained above, this analysis is limited to comparing the applicable definition to only what a jury necessarily found (or needed to find in the case of a plea) in reaching the prior conviction or to which a defendant necessarily pleaded guilty (i.e., the least culpable act that violates the statute of conviction). As a result, the court may not consider the defendant's actual underlying conduct. Further, even when the court is permitted to review convicted of crimes falling within certain categories, rather than look to the facts of the offenses; (2) the legislative history showed that Congress generally took a categorical approach to predicate offenses; and (3) that practical difficulties and potential unfairness of a factual approach are "daunting." 495 U.S. 575, 600–01 (1990).

⁷² Johnson v. United States, 559 U.S. 133, 137 (2010).

⁷³ Id. (assuming that the defendant's Florida battery conviction was for an unwanted "touch" because the Shepard documents were ambiguous). In most contexts that use the categorical approach, such as the ACCA in Johnson, the burden is on the government to prove that the defendant has a certain number of qualifying convictions and thus, ambiguities are decided in favor of the defendant. In contexts in which the burden is on the defendant to prove the absence of a qualifying conviction under the categorical approach, ambiguous Shepard documents may lead to the opposite result. See Pereida v. Wilkinson, 141 S. Ct. 754, 767 (2021) (in the cancellation-of-removal context under the INA, ambiguous Shepard documents mean that the movant loses under the modified categorical approach because the individual has the burden of proving he or she does not have prior convictions for crimes involving moral turpitude).

⁷⁴ Moncrieffe v. Holder, 569 U.S. 184, 190–91 (2013); see also Johnson, 559 U.S. at 137 (district court had to assume that the defendant's state conviction rested on nothing more than the "least of these acts"). At least one circuit has concluded that when comparing elements of prior convictions with the elements of crimes under federal law, the categorical approach requires comparison with only the "most similar" federal crime rather than any possible federal crime. Rosa v. Att'y Gen. U.S., 950 F.3d 67, 76 (3d Cir. 2020).

Shepard documents under the modified categorical approach, the focus of the court’s inquiry remains only on determining the statute of conviction and not the underlying conduct.

Although the court must consider the least culpable conduct necessary for a conviction under the statute, there still must be a “realistic probability, not a theoretical possibility” that a state would apply its statute to that conduct.⁷⁵ Courts generally have held that such a realistic probability exists where the statute “explicitly defines a crime more broadly than the generic definition” or where the defendant points to a case “in which the state courts did in fact apply the statute in the special (non-generic) manner for which he argues.”⁷⁶

Most circuits have held that the plain language of a statute can make clear that it applies to conduct not covered by a federal definition, regardless of the lack of any example case applying the statute to those exact facts.⁷⁷ For example, the Tenth Circuit held that an Oklahoma statute forbidding pointing a firearm at another was not a violent felony under the ACCA’s force clause where the statute included purposes of “whimsy, humor or prank” in addition to violent purposes such as threats of physical injury.⁷⁸ Although the defendant had not presented a case where Oklahoma prosecuted someone for pointing a firearm for purposes of whimsy, humor, or prank, the Tenth Circuit explained “no legal imagination is required to see that the threatened use of physical force is not necessary for a conviction” because “the statute lists means to commit [the] crime that would render the crime non-violent under the ACCA’s force clause.”⁷⁹

Absent such clarity, courts have required a showing that a state actually has applied its statute to specific conduct for there to be a realistic probability that it applies to broader ⁷⁵ Gonzales v. Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. 183, 193 (2007); see also Moncrieffe, 569 U.S. at 206 (requiring proof that the state actually prosecutes the relevant offense in a nongeneric manner).

⁷⁶ United States v. Baldon, 956 F.3d 1115, 1124 (9th Cir. 2020) (first quoting Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. at 193, then quoting Chavez-Solis v. Lynch, 803 F.3d 1004, 1009 (9th Cir. 2015)); see also United States v. Butts, 40 F.4th 766, 772–73 (6th Cir. 2022) (collecting state cases providing “realistic probability” the state would apply its robbery statute to conduct that falls outside the definition of “crime of violence” so it could not be a crime of violence under the elements clause of §4B1.2); United States v. Coats, 8 F.4th 1228, 1247 (11th Cir. 2021).

⁷⁷ See, e.g., United States v. Proctor, 28 F.4th 538, 552–53 (4th Cir. 2022); Gonzalez v. Wilkinson, 990 F.3d 654, 660–61 (8th Cir. 2021); United States v. Cantu, 964 F.3d 924, 934 (10th Cir. 2020) (“[W]e have held that a defendant need not come forward with instances of actual prosecution when the ‘plain language’ of the statute proscribes the conduct at issue.”); Portee v. United States, 941 F.3d 263, 273 (7th Cir. 2019); Hylton v. Sessions, 897 F.3d 57, 63–64 (2d Cir. 2018); United States v. Vail-Bailon, 868 F.3d 1293, 1303 (11th Cir. 2017); Swaby v. Yates, 847 F.3d 62, 66 (1st Cir. 2017); Chavez-Solis, 803 F.3d at 1009–10; United States v. Lara, 590 F. App’x 574, 584 (6th Cir. 2014); Jean-Louis v. Att’y Gen. of U.S., 582 F.3d 462, 481 (3d Cir. 2009). But see United States v. Castillo-Rivera, 853 F.3d 218, 222 (5th Cir. 2017) (en banc) (“It is telling that, despite these many evident opportunities, Castillo-Rivera does not point to any case in which Texas courts actually applied [the Texas statute] . . . to a defendant who could not also be covered by [the generic federal statute].”).

⁷⁸ United States v. Titties, 852 F.3d 1257, 1274–75 (10th Cir. 2017).

⁷⁹ Id.

conduct than the federal definition.⁸⁰ For example, the Fourth Circuit held that a South Carolina statute prohibiting assaulting, beating, or wounding a police officer did not meet the ACCA's force clause because in a prior South Carolina case, a defendant was convicted of that offense for "spitting blood on an officer's boot," providing a realistic probability that the offense could be premised upon rude or angry contact rather than violent contact.⁸¹

III. WHERE THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH IS APPLIED

As noted above, courts use the categorical approach to interpret definitions found throughout federal statutes and the guidelines in provisions that enhance punishment for those who have committed acts of violence or certain drug offenses. This section discusses several common statutes and guidelines where courts have applied the categorical approach.

A. STATUTES WHERE COURTS HAVE APPLIED THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH

The Supreme Court has held that the categorical approach applies to the definitions of "violent felony" in 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2);⁸² "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" in 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A);⁸³ "crime of violence" in 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3);⁸⁴ and "crime of violence" in 18 U.S.C. § 16.⁸⁵ Although the Supreme Court has not addressed the issue, circuit courts also have applied the categorical approach to determine if a defendant qualifies for an enhancement for having committed a prior enumerated sexual offense, under certain statutes in chapter 110 of title 18 concerning the sexual exploitation of children, including 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251, 2252, and 2252A.⁸⁶

Additionally, circuits have applied the categorical approach to determine the presence of prior convictions for 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(B), providing for heightened ⁸⁰ See, e.g., United States v. Jenkins, 68 F.4th 148 (3d Cir. 2023) (discussing Pennsylvania conviction for aggravated assault based on failure to act); United States v. Scott, 990 F.3d 94, 106 (2d Cir. 2021); United States v. Burghardt, 939 F.3d 397, 408 (1st Cir. 2019); United States v. Mendez, 924 F.3d 1122, 1126 (10th Cir. 2019); United States v. Jones, 914 F.3d 893, 903 (4th Cir. 2019); United States v. Maldonado, 864 F.3d 893, 900 (8th Cir. 2017); United States v. Jennings, 860 F.3d 450, 460 (7th Cir. 2017); United States v. Castillo-Rivera, 853 F.3d 218, 222 (5th Cir. 2017) (en banc); United States v. Quarles, 850 F.3d 836, 837 (6th Cir. 2017), aff'd 139 S. Ct. 1872 (2019) (regarding a different issue); United States v. Acevedo-De La Cruz, 844 F.3d 1147, 1152 (9th Cir. 2017); United States v. White, 837 F.3d 1225, 1230 (11th Cir. 2016).

⁸¹ Jones, 914 F.3d at 903 (discussing State v. Burton, 356 S.C. 259 (2003)).

⁸² Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 600 (1990).

⁸³ United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 168 (2014).

⁸⁴ United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319, 2327–31 (2019).

⁸⁵ Sessions v. Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. 1204, 1211 (2018).

⁸⁶ See infra Section III.A.5.

penalties if the instant offense followed convictions for a “serious drug felony” or “serious violent felony.”⁸⁷

By contrast, one circuit has found the categorical approach does not apply to determine whether an offense qualifies as an enumerated offense in 18 U.S.C. § 1959, the “violent crimes in aid of racketeering activity” statute.⁸⁸ Additionally, one circuit has found the categorical approach does not apply to determine whether an offense qualifies as predicate racketeering activity under 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(A), listing the elements of “racketeering activity” under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act statute.⁸⁹

1. 18 U.S.C. § 924(e) (Armed Career Criminal Act)

The Armed Career Criminal Act, 18 U.S.C. § 924(e), provides that any person who violates section 922(g)⁹⁰ and who has three previous convictions committed on separate occasions⁹¹ for a “violent felony” or a “serious drug offense,” or both, is subject to a mandatory minimum of fifteen years’ imprisonment.

A “violent felony” under the ACCA must satisfy either: (1) a force clause (“has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another”); or (2) an enumerated offenses clause (“is burglary, arson, or extortion, or involves use of explosives”).⁹² A “serious drug offense” must either be: (1) an offense under certain federal statutes like the Controlled Substances Act; or (2) a state offense with a statutory maximum of ten years or more that “involv[es] manufacturing, distributing, or ⁸⁷ See infra Section III.A.6.

⁸⁸ See infra Section III.A.7.

⁸⁹ See infra Section III.A.7.

⁹⁰ Section 922(g) of title 18 of the United States Code, makes it a crime for certain classes of person (such as those who previously have been convicted of a felony or are fugitives from justice) to possess or transport a firearm and typically carries a maximum penalty of fifteen years’ imprisonment. 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g), 924(a)(8). The maximum penalty for section 922(g) offenses was ten years prior to the Bipartisan Safer Communities Act, Pub. L. No. 117–159, 136 Stat. 1313 (2022).

⁹¹ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(1) (ACCA predicates must have been “committed on occasions different from one another” to count as separate predicates). The Supreme Court held that multiple crimes committed sequentially in a spree constitute one “occasion” for purposes of the ACCA. Wooden v. United States, 142 S. Ct. 1063 (2022) (“[The defendant’s] one-after-another-after-another burglary of ten units in a single storage facility occurred on one ‘occasion,’ under a natural construction of that term and consistent with the reason it became part of ACCA.”). Historically, circuit courts determined if offenses were committed on “separate occasions” for purposes of the ACCA by focusing on factors like whether it is possible to discern the point at which one offense was completed and another offense began, whether it would have been possible for an offender to cease criminal conduct after the first offense without committing the second offense, and whether the offenses are committed in different locations. See, e.g., United States v. Hennessee, 932 F.3d 437, 444 (6th Cir. 2019).

⁹² 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B).

possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance.”⁹³ In Shular v. United States, the Supreme Court determined that the state offense provision requires using a categorical approach that compares the elements of a state statute with the conduct described; the Court rejected the argument that the state offense provision creates a definition premised on generic offenses.⁹⁴

Appendix A in the Guidelines Manual references section 924(e) offenses to §2K2.1 (Unlawful Receipt, Possession, or Transportation of Firearms or Ammunition; Prohibited Transactions Involving Firearms or Ammunition) and §4B1.4 (Armed Career Criminal).⁹⁵ Section 2K2.1 provides for higher base offense levels if a defendant has sustained one or more prior felony convictions for either a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense.”⁹⁶ Section 4B1.4 provides that a defendant who is subject to an enhanced sentence under the provisions of section 924(e) is an armed career criminal.⁹⁷ The terms “violent felony” and “serious drug offense” in section 924(e)(2) are not identical to the definitions of “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” used in §4B1.1, and the time periods for the counting of prior sentences under §4A1.2 (Definitions and Instructions for Computing Criminal History) do not apply to the determination of whether a defendant is subject to an enhanced sentence under section 924(e).⁹⁸

2. 18 U.S.C. §§ 921(a)(33)(A) (Misdemeanor Crime of Domestic Violence) and 922(g)(9) (Unlawful Possession of a Firearm)

Section 922(g)(9) of title 18 of the United States Code, makes it a crime for a person who previously has been convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence to possess or transport a firearm and typically carries a maximum penalty of fifteen years’ imprisonment.⁹⁹ Section 921(a)(33)(A) defines “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence” as a misdemeanor which has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon, committed by a current or former spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim, by a person with whom the victim shares a child in common, by a person who is cohabiting with or has cohabited with the ⁹³ Id. § 924(e)(2)(A)(i)–(ii) (A “serious drug offense” must be an offense under the Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. § 801, the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act, 21 U.S.C. § 951, or chapter 705 of title 46, for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed by law, or an offense under state law involving manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed by law).

⁹⁴ 140 S. Ct. 779, 782 (2020).

⁹⁵ See USSG App. A (Statutory Index).

⁹⁶ See USSG §2K2.1(a)(1)–(4).

⁹⁷ See USSG §4B1.4(a). Section 4B1.4 also provides for the greater of alternative offense levels and criminal history category based upon certain circumstances. USSG §4B1.4(b), (c).

⁹⁸ USSG §4B1.4, comment. (n.1).

⁹⁹ See 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g)(9), 924(a)(8).

victim as a spouse, parent, or guardian, or by a person similarly situated to a spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim, or by a person who has a current or recent former dating relationship with the victim.¹⁰⁰

The Supreme Court has held that in a section 922(g)(9) prosecution, the predicate-offense statute need not require, as an element, the existence of a domestic relationship between the offender and the victim; however, the prosecution must prove the existence of a domestic relationship beyond a reasonable doubt.¹⁰¹ The force clause, however, is interpreted under the categorical approach.¹⁰² Precedent regarding section 921(a)(33)(A)'s force clause also does not always apply to other force clauses; twice, the Supreme Court has treated section 921(a)(33)(A) differently from the ACCA's "violent felony" definition due to differences in wording and purpose of the statutes.¹⁰³

Appendix A in the Guidelines Manual references section 922(g)(9) offenses to §2K2.1 (Unlawful Receipt, Possession, or Transportation of Firearms or Ammunition; Prohibited Transactions Involving Firearms or Ammunition).¹⁰⁴ Section 2K2.1 provides for higher base offense levels if a defendant has sustained one or more prior felony convictions for either a "crime of violence" or a "controlled substance offense," by reference to §4B1.2.¹⁰⁵

3. 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) (Use of a Firearm During a Crime of Violence or Drug Trafficking Offense)

Section 924(c) makes it unlawful for an individual to possess, brandish, or discharge a firearm "during and in relation to any crime of violence or drug trafficking crime;" this crime carries mandatory consecutive penalties between five years and life depending on the type of firearm possessed, how the firearm was used, and whether the defendant was previously convicted of an offense under section 924(c).¹⁰⁶ A drug trafficking crime is a felony "punishable under the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the ¹⁰⁰ Id. § 921(a)(33)(A)(ii).

¹⁰¹ United States v. Hayes, 555 U.S. 415, 426 (2009).

¹⁰² United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 168 (2014).

¹⁰³ Compare Castleman, 572 U.S. at 163–68 (the term "physical force" in section 921(a)(33)(A) is satisfied by the common-law battery definition), with Johnson v. United States, 559 U.S. 133, 139–40 (2010) (rejecting the common-law definition of battery for the term "violent felony" in the ACCA), and Stokeling v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 544, 553 (2019) (same). Compare Voisine v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2272, 2280 (2016) (crimes with a mens rea of recklessness may constitute a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence), with Leocal v. Ashcroft, 543 U.S. 1, 9 (2004) (18 U.S.C. § 16(a)'s force clause requires "a higher degree of intent than negligent or merely accidental conduct"), and Borden v. United States, 141 S. Ct. 1817, 1825 (2021) (plurality opinion) (recklessness does not satisfy the ACCA's force clause, and stating in dicta it would not satisfy 18 U.S.C. § 16(a)). But see Borden, 141 S. Ct. at 1835 (Thomas, J., concurring in the judgment) (providing the necessary fifth vote in Borden but reasoning that Voisine was wrongly decided).

¹⁰⁴ See USSG App. A.

¹⁰⁵ See USSG §2K2.1(a)(1)–(4); USSG §2K2.1, comment. (n.1).

¹⁰⁶ 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(1)(A)–(C).

Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), or chapter 705 of title 46.”¹⁰⁷ A “crime of violence” is defined in section 924(c) as a felony which “has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another.”¹⁰⁸

4. 18 U.S.C. § 16 (Crime of Violence Defined)

Numerous criminal statutes in the United States Code reference the “crime of violence” definition found in 18 U.S.C. § 16(a), which provides:¹⁰⁹

The term ‘crime of violence’ means an offense that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another.¹¹⁰

Notably, the “safety valve” provision at 18 U.S.C. § 3553(f), which allows a court to impose a sentence below the mandatory minimum for certain controlled substance offenses, now requires that a defendant seeking such relief must not have a prior 2-point “violent offense” under the guidelines.¹¹¹ Pursuant to such statute, the phrase “violent offense,” in turn, means a “crime of violence” as defined in section 16(a).¹¹²

5. 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251; 2252; 2252A (Prior Sex Offense Convictions)

Chapter 110 of title 18 contains offenses relating to the sexual exploitation of children, including the coercion or transportation of a minor for the purposes of production of child pornography and the possession, receipt, or transportation of child pornography. Sections 2251, 2252, and 2252A include recidivist enhancements with increased ¹⁰⁷ Id. § 924(c)(2).

¹⁰⁸ Id. § 924(c)(3)(A).

¹⁰⁹ See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 25 (use of minors in crimes of violence), 119 (release of personal information of certain people with the intent to incite the commission of a crime of violence), 1956 (money laundering), 3663A (Mandatory Victims Restitution Act); 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(7) (penalty enhancement for selling drugs with the intent to commit a crime of violence). In addition to criminal law, section 16 also is referenced in the immigration and bankruptcy contexts. See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. §§ 1101(a)(43), 1227(a)(2)(A)(iii), (E)(i) (Grounds for deportation); 11 U.S.C. § 707(c) (Grounds for dismissal of a bankruptcy case); 18 U.S.C. § 3181 (authorizing extradition of foreign nationals who have committed crimes of violence in other countries). In Sessions v. Dimaya, the Supreme Court held section 16(b), which contains a residual clause, is unconstitutionally void for vagueness. 138 S. Ct. 1204 (2018); see supra note 39. Section 16(a) remains in effect and is analyzed using the categorical approach.

¹¹⁰ This definition had its origin in the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (CCA), which repealed a previous definition of the term “crime of violence.” Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 1976, 2136. The legislative history to the CCA states that while the term “crime of violence” was “occasionally used in present law, it is not defined, and no body of case law has arisen with respect to it.” Rep. No. 98-225, at 307 (1983), reprinted in 1984 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3182, 3486.

¹¹¹ 18 U.S.C. § 3553(f)(1)(C).

¹¹² Id. § 3553(g); see also First Step Act of 2018, Pub. L. No. 115-391, § 402, 132 Stat. 5194, 5221.

mandatory terms of imprisonment if a defendant has a prior state conviction “relating to” a list of enumerated sexual offenses.

Section 2251(a) makes it unlawful to use, entice, or coerce a minor to engage in, or to transport a minor with intent that the minor engage in, any sexually explicit conduct for the purposes of production of child pornography. Typically, section 2251 has a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment of 15 years and a maximum term of imprisonment of 30 years. However, section 2251(e) contains recidivist enhancements providing for a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment of twenty five years and a maximum term of imprisonment of fifty years, if a defendant has one prior conviction for certain federal sexual offenses, or a prior conviction under any state law “relating to” a list of enumerated sexual offenses, and a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment of thirty five years and a maximum term of imprisonment of life, if a defendant has two or more such prior convictions.¹¹³

Sections 2252(a) and 2252A(a) make it unlawful for an individual to knowingly transport, ship, transmit, distribute, receive, reproduce, sell, or possess child pornography. Typically, offenses under sections 2252(a) and 2252A(a) carry penalties of between five and twenty years’ imprisonment for transporting, shipping, transmitting, receiving, reproducing, or selling child pornography, and up to ten years’ imprisonment for possessing child pornography.¹¹⁴ However, both sections contain recidivist enhancements providing for a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment of fifteen years and maximum term of imprisonment of forty years for distribution of child pornography and a mandatory minimum term of ten years and maximum term of imprisonment of twenty years for possessing child pornography if a defendant has a prior conviction for certain federal sexual offenses¹¹⁵ or a prior conviction under any state law “relating to” a list of enumerated sexual offenses.¹¹⁶

The categorical approach is used to determine whether state convictions “relating to” enumerated sexual offenses qualify as predicates for the purposes of these enhancements. The wording in these sections affects the way the categorical analysis is applied. For example, the Sixth Circuit held that under the categorical approach, the phrase “relating to” triggers the enhancement in section 2251 for prior conduct that “stands in some relation, bears upon, or is associated with that generic offense” and thus “does not require a perfect match between the predicate offense and enhancement-qualifying conduct.”¹¹⁷ Similarly, the Fourth Circuit held that the phrase “relating to” in section 2252A calls for a different

¹¹³ 18 U.S.C. § 2251(e).

¹¹⁴ Id. § 2252(b); 2252A(b).

¹¹⁵ See id.

¹¹⁶ These provisions include state offenses “relating to aggravated sexual abuse, sexual abuse, or abusive sexual conduct involving a minor or ward.” Id.

¹¹⁷ United States v. Sykes, 65 F.4th 867, 885 (6th Cir. 2023) (quoting United States v. Mateen, 806 F.3d 857, 860 (6th Cir. 2015)).

application of the categorical approach where “the match need not be perfect” and the conduct only needs to “stand in some relation” to the enumerated offenses in the list.¹¹⁸

6. Drug Offenses

Circuits also have applied the categorical approach to determine whether the defendant has applicable prior convictions for purposes of 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(B), which provides for heightened penalties if the instant offense followed convictions for a “serious drug felony” or “serious violent felony.”¹¹⁹ The Second, Seventh, and Eighth Circuits have explicitly held that the categorical approach applies to section 841(b)(1)(B).¹²⁰ The First, Third, and Ninth Circuits also have applied the categorical approach to the “felony drug offense” definition, though without explanation.¹²¹ However, the Sixth Circuit, in an unpublished opinion and without explanation, did not apply the categorical approach to felony drug offenses.¹²²

7. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1959, 1961 (Violent Crimes in Aid of Racketeering Activity (VICAR) and Racketeering (RICO))

Section 1959 of title 18, the “violent crimes in aid of racketeering activity” (VICAR) statute, proscribes committing certain violent crimes—including assault with a dangerous weapon—or threatening to commit a “crime of violence” as consideration for the receipt of or for a promise or agreement to pay anything of pecuniary value from an enterprise engaged in racketeering activity.¹²³ At least one circuit has held that the categorical approach does not apply to determining whether an offense qualifies as an assault with a ¹¹⁸ United States v. Hardin, 998 F.3d 582, 588 (4th Cir. 2021) (“[a] different way of saying this is that the inclusion of ‘relating to’ means we apply the categorical approach ‘and then some’” and collecting cases similarly interpreting such terminology); see also United States v. Ragonese, 47 F.4th 106, 111 (2d Cir. 2022) (“strict comparison” in application of the categorical approach for the enhancement at § 2252A is “loosened” in the context of sexual abuse laws to apply “not simply to state offenses that are equivalent” but also to state offenses “that stand in some relation” to a generic offense” (quoting United States v. Strickland, 601 F.3d 963, 967 (9th Cir. 2010))); United States v. Jaycox, 962 F.3d 1066, 1069 (9th Cir. 2020) (to support the enhancement at § 2252, “it is enough if the conviction ‘stands in some relation, bears upon, or is associated with th[e] generic offense’” (citations omitted)).

¹¹⁹ 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(B). Section 960, title 21 of the United States Code uses the same penalty structure as section 841. Although courts have not yet considered the issue, the logic behind applying the categorical approach to section 841 would suggest it applies to section 960 as well.

¹²⁰ United States v. Thompson, 961 F.3d 545, 549–52 (2d Cir. 2020); United States v. Elder, 900 F.3d 491, 501 (7th Cir. 2018); United States v. Brown, 598 F.3d 1013, 1017 (8th Cir. 2010).

¹²¹ United States v. Aviles, 938 F.3d 503, 511 (3d Cir. 2019); United States v. Ocampo-Estrada, 873 F.3d 661, 667 (9th Cir. 2017); United States v. Brown, 500 F.3d 48, 59 (1st Cir. 2007).

¹²² United States v. Soto, 8 F. App’x 535, 541 (6th Cir. 2001).

¹²³ 18 U.S.C. § 1959. Section 1959 further prohibits acting in order to gain entry into the enterprise or to maintain or increase one’s position in the enterprise. Id.

dangerous weapon in 18 U.S.C. § 1959.¹²⁴ However, the Fourth Circuit cautioned that it was not considering whether the categorical approach would apply in analyzing the rest of the VICAR statute, specifically the portion prohibiting the act of threatening to commit a “crime of violence.”¹²⁵

Section 1961 of title 18 provides definitions for the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), at 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962–68, including a definition of “racketeering activity.”¹²⁶ “Racketeering activity” is defined at 18 U.S.C. § 1961 and includes “any act or threat involving” certain offenses chargeable under state law and punishable by imprisonment for more than one year, such as murder, kidnapping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, dealing in obscene matter, or dealing in a controlled substance or listed chemical.¹²⁷ As with section 1959, at least one circuit also has held that the categorical approach does not apply to determining whether an offense qualifies as one of the elements of “racketeering activity” listed in section 1691(1)(A).¹²⁸

B. GUIDELINES WHERE COURTS HAVE APPLIED THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH

Although the guidelines do not call for use of the categorical approach, and the Supreme Court has not held that the categorical approach applies to the guidelines, every circuit has, by analogy, applied the categorical approach to several guideline provisions.¹²⁹

¹²⁴ United States v. Keene, 955 F.3d 391, 392–93 (4th Cir. 2020) (“the statutory language at issue requires only that a defendant’s conduct, presently before the court, constitute one of the enumerated federal offenses as well as the charged state crime”; the statutory text contains no indication that “Congress intended an element-by-element comparison of the enumerated federal offense with the specified state offense”).

¹²⁵ Id. at 396–97. In an unpublished opinion, the Sixth Circuit stated § 1959(a) requires application of the modified categorical approach to determine whether an offense qualifies as a “crime of violence” under the statute because § 1959 is a divisible statute. United States v. Hall, Nos. 21-5602/5288/5472, 2023 WL 1991891, at *4 (6th Cir. Feb. 14, 2023).

¹²⁶ 18 U.S.C. § 1961.

¹²⁷ Id.

¹²⁸ Johnson v. United States, 64 F.4th 715, 723 (6th Cir. 2023) (the RICO statute “refer[s] unequivocally to the defendant’s conduct, not the State law or the elements of the State statute,” further noting the Seventh Circuit had rejected the use of the categorical approach “out of hand,” as “not consistent with the text of the [RICO] statute,” in United States v. Brown, 973 F.3d 667, 709 (7th Cir. 2020)).

¹²⁹ E.g., United States v. Rabb, 942 F.3d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 2019); United States v. Scott, 990 F.3d 94, 104 (2d Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 142 S. Ct. 397 (2021); United States v. Bullock, 970 F.3d 210, 214–15 (3d Cir. 2020); United States v. Carthorne, 726 F.3d 503, 511 (4th Cir. 2013); United States v. Zuniga, 860 F.3d 276, 284 (5th Cir. 2017); United States v. Camp, 903 F.3d 594, 599 (6th Cir. 2018); Adams v. United States, 911 F.3d 397, 405 (7th Cir. 2018); United States v. Brown, 1 F.4th 617, 619–20 (8th Cir. 2021); United States v. Barragan, 871 F.3d 689, 713–14 (9th Cir. 2017); United States v. Ontiveros, 875 F.3d 533, 535 (10th Cir. 2017); United States v. Gandy, 917 F.3d 1333, 1339 (11th Cir. 2019); United States v. Sheffield, 832 F.3d 296, 314 (D.C. Cir. 2016), overruled on other grounds by Beckles v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 886 (2017).

1. Sections 4B1.1 and 4B1.2 (Career Offender Guideline and Definitions)

Section 4B1.1 provides for an enhanced offense level and criminal history category if: (1) the defendant was at least 18 years old at the time the defendant committed the instant offense of conviction; (2) the instant offense is a felony that is a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense”; and (3) the defendant has at least two prior felony convictions of either a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense.”¹³⁰ The terms “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” are defined in §4B1.2.

“Crime of violence” is defined as:

any offense under federal or state law, punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, that (1) has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another, or (2) is murder, voluntary manslaughter, kidnapping, aggravated assault, a forcible sex offense, robbery, arson, extortion, or the use or unlawful possession of a firearm described in 26 U.S.C. § 5845(a) or explosive material as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 841(c).¹³¹

“Controlled substance offense” is currently defined as:

an offense under federal or state law, punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute or dispense.¹³²

Courts have used the categorical approach to determine whether a defendant’s instant conviction and prior convictions fall under either of the definitions in §4B1.2. These definitions also are referenced in other guidelines, most notably in §2K2.1, which increases ¹³⁰ USSG §4B1.1(a). The career offender guidelines implement Congress’ directive found at 28 U.S.C. § 994(h). See USSG §4B1.1, comment. (backg’d.).

¹³¹ USSG §4B1.2(a). In 2023, the Commission published an amendment that adds a new subsection §4B1.2(e) that defines “robbery” to mirror the definition at 18 U.S.C. 1951(b)(1) and further clarifies that the “phrase ‘actual or threatened force’ refers to force that is sufficient to overcome a victim’s resistance,” relying on Stokeling v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 544 (2019). See Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023). The amendment will go into effect on November 1, 2023, absent congressional action to the contrary.

¹³² USSG §4B1.2(b). In 2023, the Commission published an amendment to the definition of “controlled substance offense” to include offenses described in 46 U.S.C. § 70503(a) or § 70506(b) (maritime drug offenses) at a new subsection §4B1.2(b)(2). See Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023). The amendment will go into effect on November 1, 2023, absent congressional action to the contrary.

the guideline range for defendants who commit firearms offenses after a prior conviction for a “crime of violence” or “controlled substance offense.”¹³³

The Commentary to §4B1.2, Application Note 1, currently provides that the definitions of “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” “include the offenses of conspiring, aiding and abetting, and attempting to commit such offenses.”¹³⁴ As discussed infra, circuit courts have split regarding the validity of Application Note 1, namely, whether §4B1.2(b)’s definition of “controlled substance offense” includes inchoate offenses that are not listed in the guideline text.¹³⁵ As further discussed infra, in 2023 the Commission published an amendment that moves the commentary in Application Note 1 to the text of the guideline.¹³⁶

2. Section 2L1.2 (Illegal Reentry)

Courts, based on circuit precedent, could use the categorical approach for §2L1.2(b)(2)(E) and (b)(3)(E), which provide for a 2-level enhancement if, before or after a defendant was ordered deported or removed from the United States for the first time, the defendant engaged in criminal conduct that resulted in three or more convictions for misdemeanors that are “crimes of violence or drug trafficking offenses.”¹³⁷ Similar to the definition of “crime of violence” in §4B1.2,¹³⁸ the Commentary to §2L1.2 explains that “crime of violence”

means any of the following offenses under federal, state, or local law: murder, voluntary manslaughter, kidnapping, aggravated assault, a forcible sex offense, robbery, arson, extortion, the use or unlawful possession of a firearm described in 26 U.S.C. § 5845(a) or explosive material as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 841(c), or any other offense under federal, state, or local law that has as an ¹³³ USSG §2K2.1(a)(1)–(4).

¹³⁴ USSG §4B1.2, comment. (n.1).

¹³⁵ Compare, e.g., United States v. Havis, 927 F.3d 382, 385–87 (6th Cir. 2019) (en banc) (Application Note 1 is invalid), with, e.g., United States v. Adams, 934 F.3d 720, 729 (7th Cir. 2019) (Application Note 1 is valid). See infra note 152 (outlining further cases on either side of the circuit split).

¹³⁶ See infra notes 153–55 and accompanying text.

¹³⁷ USSG §2L1.2(b)(2)(E), (3)(E). Before 2016, §2L1.2 also provided for an increase to a defendant’s base offense level if the defendant was previously deported or remained in the United States after sustaining certain types of prior convictions, including “crimes of violence” and “drug trafficking offenses.” Courts applied the categorical approach to determine whether a prior offense fell within one of those definitions. In 2016, the Commission promulgated a comprehensive amendment to §2L1.2 that eliminated, with very limited exceptions, the categorical approach for determining whether a prior conviction qualifies for a particular enhancement under that guideline. See USSG App. C, amend. 802 (effective Nov. 1, 2016) (explaining in its Reason for Amendment that “[i]nstead of the categorical approach, the amendment adopts a much simpler sentence-imposed model for determining the applicability of predicate convictions”).

¹³⁸ While the career offender definitions describe convictions punishable by over a year of imprisonment, these enhancements are specifically targeted at prior misdemeanors.

element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another.¹³⁹

Similar to the definition of “controlled substance offense” in §4B1.2, the commentary to §2L1.2 explains that “drug trafficking offense”:

means an offense under federal, state, or local law that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of, or offer to sell a controlled substance (or counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute, or dispense.¹⁴⁰

3. Section 7B1.1 (Grade of Violations)

Chapter Seven, Part B (Violations of Probation and Supervised Release) sets forth procedures for determining whether a defendant has violated supervised release or probation and, if so, for imposing sentence. Courts disagree on whether the categorical approach applies to the definition of “Grade A Violations” under §7B1.1.¹⁴¹ Under §7B1.1(a)(1), Grade A violations—the most serious grade—are defined, among other things, as “conduct constituting (A) a federal, state, or local offense punishable by a term of imprisonment exceeding one year that (i) is a crime of violence, or (ii) is a controlled substance offense.”¹⁴² The commentary defines “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” by reference to the definitions in §4B1.2.¹⁴³

The circuits disagree about whether the “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” determination for §7B1.1 should be evaluated using the categorical approach, given the reference to §4B1.2 (which courts analyze using the categorical approach), or instead using a conduct-based approach, given the presence of the phrase “conduct constituting.”

The Fourth Circuit has stated that the “familiar” categorical approach applies to the “crime of violence” determination under §7B1.1(a), holding that a defendant’s North ¹³⁹ USSG §2L1.2, comment (n. 2). In 2023, the Commission published an amendment to Application Note 2 of §2L1.2 to further define “robbery” in the definition of “crime of violence.” The definition mirrors the definition at 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b)(1) and is in response to recent court decisions holding that Hobbs Act robbery is not a crime of violence under the guidelines. The definition clarifies that “actual or threatened force” for purposes of the new “robbery” definition is “force sufficient to overcome a victim’s resistance,” relying on Stokeling v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 544 (2019). See Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023). The amendment will go into effect on November 1, 2023, absent congressional action to the contrary.

¹⁴⁰ USSG §2L1.2, comment. (n.2).

¹⁴¹ See USSG §7B1.1(a) (providing three grades of probation and supervised release violations in descending tiers of seriousness, from Grade A to Grade C).

¹⁴² Id. (emphasis added).

¹⁴³ USSG §7B1.1, comment. (n.2, 3).

Carolina assault conviction was not categorically a “crime of violence” for purposes of his supervised release violation.¹⁴⁴ The First, Third, and Ninth Circuits have adopted a “hybrid” approach to §7B1.1(a).¹⁴⁵ Under this approach, the government must take two steps to demonstrate a Grade A violation.¹⁴⁶ First, the government must identify some qualifying offense that is a crime of violence or a controlled substance offense under the categorical approach (but not necessarily a statute that the defendant was convicted under).¹⁴⁷ Second, the government then need only show that the defendant actually committed (i.e., his “conduct constituted”) that crime’s elements, regardless of whether he was convicted of that offense.¹⁴⁸ In making this assessment, the court may look beyond Shepard documents and may consider any evidence admissible in revocation hearings.¹⁴⁹ As the Ninth Circuit explained, the court in a supervised release context only needs “to identify a statutory offense for which the defendant could have been convicted,” though the categorical analysis of whether that offense qualifies is the same.¹⁵⁰

By contrast, the Second, Seventh, and Eighth Circuits have held that the categorical approach does not apply to §7B1.1(a), evaluating whether the defendant’s conduct alone meets the definitions in the career offender guideline.¹⁵¹

¹⁴⁴ See United States v. Simmons, 917 F.3d 312, 316–17, 320–21 (4th Cir. 2019); see also United States v. Mack, 56 F.4th 303, 306 (4th Cir. 2022) (applying the categorical approach and citing Stokeling, 139 S. Ct. at 553, to find South Carolina first degree assault and battery conviction is a crime of violence under §4B1.2 for purposes of supervised release violation; level of force needed to inflict death or great bodily injury is plainly sufficient to ‘overcome a victim’s physical resistance’ ”).

¹⁴⁵ United States v. Garcia-Cartagena, 953 F.3d 14, 22 (1st Cir. 2020) (citing United States v. Willis, 795 F.3d 986, 992–94 (9th Cir. 2015) and United States v. Carter, 730 F.3d 187, 192–93 (3d Cir. 2013)). Although the Carter court stated that the categorical approach “does not apply” in the revocation context, its statement, in context, was explaining why uncharged conduct can form the basis of a supervised release violation and its analysis used the same hybrid approach of the First and Ninth Circuits. See Carter, 730 F.3d at 192.

¹⁴⁶ Garcia-Cartagena, 953 F.3d at 21.

¹⁴⁷ Id. at 22–24.

¹⁴⁸ Id. at 24–25.

¹⁴⁹ Id.

¹⁵⁰ Willis, 795 F.3d at 993.

¹⁵¹ United States v. Golden, 843 F.3d 1162, 1166–67 (7th Cir. 2016) (defendant committed a Grade A violation because his conduct involved “physical force”); United States v. Schwab, 85 F.3d 326, 327 (8th Cir. 1996) (the district court properly looked to the defendant’s conduct to determine the grade of his supervised release violation); United States v. Cawley, 48 F.3d 90, 93 (2d Cir. 1995) (defendant’s conduct constituted the “threatened use of physical force”); see also United States v. Pitts, 739 F. App’x 353, 354–55 (8th Cir. 2018) (citing Schwab in rejecting defendant’s argument that the categorical approach applies to §7B1.1(a)). The Sixth Circuit, in an unpublished case, upheld the district court’s determination of a Grade B violation based on the defendant’s actual conduct rather than the offense of conviction. United States v. Cox, No. 21-5222, 2021 WL 5710128 at *2 (6th Cir. 2021) (citing Application Note 1). The Fifth Circuit, in an unpublished case, found any error harmless when it “assum[ed], without deciding, the district court erred in concluding that the categorical approach did not apply” to the determination of a Grade A violation). United States v. Patel, No. 22-10021, 2022 WL 17246941 at *1 (5th Cir. 2022) (per curiam).

IV. CIRCUIT ISSUES

The categorical approach has been the subject of much litigation over the years. This section highlights selected issues that have arisen involving application of the categorical approach.

A. INCHOATE OFFENSES

Even if a substantive offense meets a given federal definition under the categorical approach, difficulties may arise where a defendant was convicted of attempting or conspiring to violate the substantive offense.¹⁵² This section discusses circuit conflicts that have developed surrounding inchoate offenses.

1. Application Note 1 to USSG §4B1.2

Currently, the Commentary to §4B1.2, Application Note 1, provides that “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” include the offenses of conspiring, aiding and abetting, and attempting to commit such offenses.

To address a circuit conflict regarding the authoritative weight afforded commentary in §4B1.2, the Commission published an amendment to the guideline in 2023.¹⁵³ The amendment moves the commentary in Application Note 1, without change, to ¹⁵² An exception to this general issue is the ACCA’s drug offense provision, which includes offenses “involving” certain conduct relating to controlled substances. Courts have held that the word “involving” broadens the ACCA to include inchoate crimes. See, e.g., United States v. Ojeda, 951 F.3d 66, 75 (2d Cir. 2020) (“‘involving’ reasonably identifies inchoate as well as substantive drug crimes”).

¹⁵³ Compare United States v. Campbell, 22 F.4th 438, 447 (4th Cir. 2022) (plain text of guideline is inconsistent with inclusion of attempt offenses in commentary; Application Note 1 disregarded), United States v. Nasir, 17 F.4th 459, 469–72 (3d Cir. 2021) (en banc) (inchoate crimes are not included in the guideline; Application Note 1 was not binding), United States v. Havis, 927 F.3d 382, 385–87 (6th Cir. 2019) (en banc) (Application Note 1 is invalid), and United States v. Winstead, 890 F.3d 1082, 1091 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (same), with United States v. Maloid, 1 F.4th 795 (10th Cir. 2023) (Kisor v. Wilkie, 139 S. Ct. 2400 (2019), “did not abrogate” Stinson v. United States, 508 U.S. 36 (1993), so the district court properly deferred to Application Note 1 to §4B1.2); United States v. Groves, 65 F.4th 166, 170–71 (4th Cir. 2023) (inclusion of aiding and abetting in commentary was not improper expansion of §4B1.2b; “aiding and abetting” is not a standalone offense but is a theory of criminal liability for the underlying offense), United States v. Jefferson, 975 F.3d 700, 708 (8th Cir. 2020) (upholding Application Note 1 based on prior precedent), United States v. Lewis, 963 F.3d 16, 23–25 (1st Cir. 2020) (holding “that the case for finding the prior panels would have reached a different result today” about the validity of Application Note 1 “is not so obviously correct as to allow this panel to decree that the prior precedent is no longer good law in this circuit”), United States v. Richardson, 958 F.3d 151, 154–55 (2d Cir. 2020) (Application Note 1 is valid and consistent with the guideline text of §4B1.2), United States v. Adams, 934 F.3d 720, 729 (7th Cir. 2019) (same), and United States v. Lovato, 950 F.3d 1337, 1347 (10th Cir. 2020) (stating without further explanation that a prior state conviction for attempted second-degree assault does not “fall[] outside the ambit of Application Note 1” (citing United States v. Martinez, 602 F.3d 1166 (10th Cir. 2010) (“reasoning that attempting to commit a crime of violence is itself a crime of violence”)). But see United States v. Moses, 23 F.4th 347, 349 (4th Cir. 2022) (“Upon consideration of the unique role served by the Sentencing Commission and its Guidelines Manual and a careful reading of both Stinson and Kisor, we conclude that Kisor did not overrule Stinson’s standard for the deference owed to the text of the guideline, at §4B1.2(d) and (e).¹⁵⁴ Absent congressional action to the contrary, effective November 1, 2023, §4B1.2(d) will provide that the terms “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” in §4B1.2 include “the offenses of aiding and abetting, attempting to commit, or conspiring to commit any such offense.”¹⁵⁵

2. Conspiracy and Attempt Offenses

Courts apply the categorical approach to determine whether an instant or prior conviction for a substantive offense qualifies as a “crime of violence” or “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2. The circuits have split, however, on whether the categorical approach applies to determine whether the inchoate offense of conspiracy qualify separately as predicate offenses under §4B1.2. The circuits also had split on whether Hobbs Act robbery attempt offenses meet the force clause under section 924(c) until the Supreme Court resolved that question in 2022.

a. Conspiracy

Courts have applied the categorical approach to determine whether conspiracy offenses qualify as predicate offenses under §4B1.2. Some, but not all, courts have held that the generic definition of conspiracy requires proof of an overt act and, therefore, conspiracy statutes that do not contain an “overt act” requirement are categorically excluded from qualifying as a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense,” even though the substantive crime is a crime of violence or a controlled substance offense.¹⁵⁶ As a result, there is a circuit split regarding whether conspiracy offenses, such as conspiracy to murder in aid of racketeering, require an “overt act” as an element of the offense to qualify as a predicate offense under §4B1.2.¹⁵⁷

Guidelines commentary.”), cert. denied, 143 S. Ct. 640 (2023). Thus, sentencing courts in the circuits applying the reasoning in Nasir, Havis, and Winstead should be aware that inchoate versions of career offender predicates will not qualify under that commentary and can only qualify under the main text in the guideline. See United States v. Cavazos, 950 F.3d 329, 336–37 (6th Cir. 2020) (applying Havis to hold that a state statute that amounted to attempted distribution does not qualify as a “controlled substance offense”).

¹⁵⁴ The new §4B1.2(e) includes additional definitions for “forcible sex offense,” “extortion,” and “prior felony conviction” that currently appear in the Commentary to §4B1.2, at Application Note 1, and adds a new definition for “robbery.” See Amendment 9 of the amendments submitted by the Commission to Congress on April 27, 2023, 88 FR 28254 (May 3, 2023).

¹⁵⁵ Id.

¹⁵⁶ See United States v. McCollum, 885 F.3d 300, 308 (4th Cir. 2018) (“An overt act is an element of the generic definition of conspiracy” (quoting United States v. Garcia-Santana, 774 F.3d 528, 537 (9th Cir. 2014))). But see United States v. Rodriguez-Rivera, 989 F.3d 183, 187 (1st Cir. 2021) (rejecting the argument that “conspiring” under Application Note 1 requires adopting a generic version of conspiracy).

¹⁵⁷ Compare United States v. Norman, 935 F.3d 232, 237–39 (4th Cir. 2019) (conspiracy to possess cocaine and cocaine base with intent to distribute, in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846, is not a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2(b) because there is no overt act requirement), McCollum, 885 F.3d at 307–08 (conspiracy to murder in aid of racketeering, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1959(a)(5), is not a “crime of violence” for career offender because the statute does not require an overt act), United States v. Martinez-Cruz, 836 F.3d 1305, 1314 (10th Cir. 2016) (conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute fifty kilograms or more of

Additionally, several circuits have held that conspiracy to commit Hobbs Act robbery under 18 U.S.C. § 1951 does not satisfy the force clause of section 924(c) because it only requires an agreement to commit Hobbs Act robbery.¹⁵⁸ For the same reason, the Eleventh Circuit also held that RICO conspiracy does not meet the force clause.¹⁵⁹

However, the Fourth Circuit held that federal conspiracy to use facilities of commerce with intent that a murder would be committed for hire (18 U.S.C. § 1958(a)) necessarily requires the use of physical force even if conspiracy alone does not implicate the use of force.¹⁶⁰ The court reasoned that conspiracy in the context of a section 1958 offense “is different because it has heightened mens rea elements [the intent to join the conspiracy and the specific intent that a murder be committed for hire], as well as the element that ‘death results.’”¹⁶¹ The court explained that the death resulting from a conspiracy to commit murder for hire meets the necessary mens rea requirement and noted that it had previously held that an act that results in death “obviously” requires physical force.¹⁶² Similarly, the First Circuit held that while conspiracies ordinarily are not violent felonies, the presence of a “death results” element in the offense that is the object of the conspiracy can bring a federal conspiracy under the purview of the force clause.¹⁶³ marijuana, in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846, is not an “aggravated felony” drug trafficking offense for purposes of §2L1.2), with United States v. Smith, 989 F.3d 575, 586 (7th Cir. 2021) (conspiring to possess with intent to distribute cocaine, in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846, is a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2 “especially given that an overt act is not always a required element”), United States v. Lewis, 963 F.3d 16, 26–27 (1st Cir. 2020) (recognizing circuit split, but concluding that district court did not plainly err in finding that conspiracy to distribute cocaine under 21 U.S.C. § 846 is a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2(b)), and United States v. Tabb, 949 F.3d 81, 86–89 (2d Cir. 2020) (disagreeing with the Fourth Circuit and concluding that conspiracy to distribute and possess with intent to distribute crack cocaine in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846 is a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2(b)).

¹⁵⁸ See Jones v. United States, 39 F.4th 523, 526 (8th Cir. 2022); Brown v. United States, 942 F.3d 1069, 1075 (11th Cir. 2019); United States v. Barrett, 937 F.3d 126, 127 (2d Cir. 2019); United States v. Simms, 914 F.3d 229, 233 (4th Cir. 2019) (en banc); United States v. Lewis, 907 F.3d 891, 894 (5th Cir. 2018).

¹⁵⁹ United States v. Green, 981 F.3d 945, 952 (11th Cir. 2020) (RICO conspiracy is not a “crime of violence” under section 924(c)’s force clause); see also United States v. Perry, 35 F.4th 293, 342 (5th Cir. 2022) (district court committed plain error by allowing jury to convict under 18 U.S.C. §§ 924(c), (j), and (o) based on a conspiracy to violate RICO as a “crime of violence” predicate), cert. denied, 143 S. Ct. 463 (2022); United States v. Khweis, 971 F.3d 453, 464 (4th Cir. 2020) (conspiracy to provide material support to ISIL does not satisfy § 924(c)’s force clause); United States v. Jones, 935 F.3d 266, 271 (5th Cir. 2019) (per curiam) (RICO conspiracy is not a “crime of violence” because it does not require proof of use, attempted use, or threatened use of force).

¹⁶⁰ United States v. Runyon, 994 F.3d 192, 203 (4th Cir. 2021).

¹⁶¹ Id.

¹⁶² Id. (while the “mens rea elements are not explicitly tied to the resulting-in-death element, in any realistic case, they must nonetheless carry forward” to that element).

¹⁶³ United States v. Tsarnaev, 968 F.3d 24, 104 (1st Cir. 2020), overruled on other grounds, 142 S. Ct. 1024 (2022).

b. Attempt

Some courts have held that generic attempt requires a substantial step towards commission of the substantive offense.¹⁶⁴ Even when a statute encompasses attempt with a substantial step requirement, i.e., requires specific intent to commit the substantive offense and a substantial step towards the commission of that offense, such as Hobbs Act robbery under section 1591,¹⁶⁵ circuits were split on whether attempted Hobbs Act robbery offenses meet the force clause under section 924(c).¹⁶⁶ In 2022, in United States v. Taylor, the Supreme Court resolved this split by holding that attempted Hobbs Act robbery does not satisfy the force clause because such an attempt offense does not require the use, attempted use, or threatened use of force.¹⁶⁷ The Court explained that while some cases can involve the defendant threatening the use of force during the attempted robbery, no element of the robbery offense requires that the government prove the defendant used, attempted to use, or threatened to use force.¹⁶⁸ The Court further explained that a “substantial step” toward the commission of the offense can include actions that do not involve the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force.¹⁶⁹

B. DIFFERENCES IN BREADTH OF THE ACCA’S AND §4B1.2’S DRUG OFFENSE PROVISIONS

Although the ACCA’s definition of “serious drug offense” and §4B1.2’s definition of “controlled substance offense” are similar and often have been analyzed interchangeably, differences in key terms have given rise to circuit conflicts. The ACCA defines a “serious drug offense” as a violation of specific federal statutes or state offenses “involving manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance” carrying a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or ¹⁶⁴ E.g., United States v. Tabb, 949 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 2020) (generic attempt comprises criminal intent and completion of a substantial step); United States v. Dozier, 848 F.3d 180, 186 (4th Cir. 2017) (same).

¹⁶⁵ 18 U.S.C. §§ 1951(a) and 2; see also United States v. Taylor, 142 S. Ct. 2015 (2022) (for attempted Hobbs Act robbery, the government must prove the defendant “intended to unlawfully take or obtain personal property by means of actual or threatened force,” and that the defendant “completed a ‘substantial step’ toward that end.”) (citing United States v. Resendiz-Ponce, 549 U. S. 102, 107 (2007)).

¹⁶⁶ Taylor, 142 S. Ct. at 2021 (explaining the majority of circuits had held the force clause in section 924(c) “encompasses not only any offense that qualifies as a ‘crime of violence’ but also any attempt to commit such a crime,” a “syllogism [that] rests on a false premise,” and finding the Fourth Circuit, as the outlier, was correct in holding attempted Hobbs Act robbery does not qualify as a crime of violence.).

¹⁶⁷ Id. at 2022. (“The elements clause does not ask whether the defendant committed a crime of violence or attempted to commit one. It asks whether the defendant did commit a crime of violence—and it proceeds to define a crime of violence as a felony that includes as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of force.”) greater,¹⁷⁰ while §4B1.2(b) defines a “controlled substance offense” as “an offense under federal or state law” carrying a maximum term of more than one year’s imprisonment “that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute, or dispense.”¹⁷¹ This section discusses three specific issues regarding these definitions.

¹⁶⁸ Id.

¹⁶⁹ Id. at 2021; see also United States v. Henderson, 64 F.4th 111, 118–19 (3d Cir. 2023) (conspiracy to commit robbery under Pennsylvania statute is not a “crime of violence” under §4B1.2 because the substantial step or overt act required “need not be forceful or criminal” (citing Taylor, 142 S. Ct. at 2021)).

1. “Involving” v. “Prohibits”

Some courts have held that the ACCA’s use of the word “involving” generally broadens its scope beyond the substantive terms that follow.¹⁷² Courts have not clarified the extent of that broadening effect, though some have cautioned that the plain meaning of “involving” still requires a relationship to its substantive terms that is not too “remote or tangential.”¹⁷³ Courts have not applied the same broadening effect to §4B1.2’s definition of “controlled substance offense.”¹⁷⁴ For instance, the Fifth Circuit has held that a Texas drug statute qualifies as a “serious drug offense” under the ACCA, citing specifically to the word “involving” in the ACCA, while also noting that circuit precedent held that it did not qualify as a “drug trafficking offense” under the then-illegal reentry guideline at §2L1.2, which used the word “prohibits.”¹⁷⁵

2. Conduct or Generic Offenses

Before 2020, circuit courts disagreed about whether the ACCA’s definition of “serious drug offense” required comparing state statutes to a generic offense (as with burglary in the ACCA’s enumerated offense clause) or conduct (as with force in the ACCA’s ¹⁷⁰ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A).

¹⁷¹ USSG §4B1.2(b); see also supra note 131.

¹⁷² See, e.g., United States v. White, 837 F.3d 1225, 1235 (11th Cir. 2016); United States v. Vickers, 540 F.3d 356, 364–65 (5th Cir. 2008) (“[t]he word ‘involving’ has expansive connotations, and . . . must be construed as extending the focus of § 924(e) beyond the precise offenses of distributing, manufacturing, or possessing” (quoting United States v. Winbush, 407 F.3d 703, 707 (5th Cir. 2005))); United States v. McKenney, 450 F.3d 39, 42 (1st Cir. 2006) (“By using ‘involving,’ Congress captured more offenses than just those that ‘are in fact’ the manufacture, distribution, or possession of, with intent to distribute, a controlled substance.”).

¹⁷³ See, e.g., United States v. Gibbs, 656 F.3d 180, 185 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting McKenney, 450 F.3d at 45).

¹⁷⁴ See White, 837 F.3d at 1235 (“[T]here is general agreement among the circuits that the ACCA’s definition of a serious drug offense is broader than the guidelines definition of a drug trafficking . . . offense because of the ACCA’s use of the term ‘involving.’”).

¹⁷⁵ Vickers, 540 F.3d at 364–65 (citing and quoting United States v. Gonzales, 484 F.3d 712 (5th Cir. 2007)).

force clause).¹⁷⁶ In Shular v. United States,¹⁷⁷ the Supreme Court resolved this split as to the ACCA, holding that section 924(e)(2)(A)(ii)'s definition of "serious drug offense" requires only that "the state offenses involve the conduct specified in the federal statute; it does not require that the state offense match certain generic offenses."¹⁷⁸ The Court relied on two features of the ACCA's text in reaching this conclusion: (1) the terms used in the statute (i.e., "manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute") were "unlikely names for generic offenses"; and (2) the ACCA used the term "involves" rather than the term "is" in defining the offenses covered.¹⁷⁹ Because Shular applied to the ACCA, and because the guidelines text is different, Shular does not necessarily resolve this issue with regard to the guidelines.

The Eleventh Circuit previously had held that the guidelines, like the ACCA, require a conduct-based comparison.¹⁸⁰ The Eleventh Circuit subsequently held in unpublished decisions that Shular did not alter this conclusion, and it has applied Shular to the guidelines in at least one published opinion.¹⁸¹ Also post-Shular, the Fourth Circuit concluded that Shular required §4B1.2's drug offense provision be read as a conduct-based definition.¹⁸² In a concurring opinion, however, one judge on that panel determined that Shular's reasoning compelled the opposite conclusion in the guidelines context—that §4B1.2's drug offense provision requires "match[ing] the elements of state drug offenses to their federal counterpart."¹⁸³ The Fifth Circuit previously distinguished between a drug offense provision in the guidelines materially identical to that in §4B1.2 and the ACCA, stating the guidelines provision "lists specific convictions (e.g., manufacture, import)" while the ACCA applied only to convictions involving certain conduct.¹⁸⁴

¹⁷⁶ Compare United States v. Franklin, 904 F.3d 793, 800 (9th Cir. 2018) (requiring comparison to a generic crime), with United States v. Smith, 775 F.3d 1262, 1267 (11th Cir. 2014) ("We need not search for the elements of 'generic' definitions of 'serious drug offense' and 'controlled substance offense' because these terms are defined by a federal statute and the Sentencing Guidelines, respectively.").

¹⁷⁷ 140 S. Ct. 779 (2020).

¹⁷⁸ Id. at 782–83 (referring to its prior decision in Kawashima v. Holder, 565 U.S. 478 (2012), finding immigration statute that provides for removal after commission of an offense that "involves fraud or deceit" applies to "offenses with elements that necessarily entail fraudulent or deceitful conduct").

¹⁷⁹ Id. at 785.

¹⁸⁰ Smith, 775 F.3d at 1267.

¹⁸¹ United States v. Bates, 960 F.3d 1278, 1293 (11th Cir. 2020) (applying Shular to the guidelines); United States v. Hunter, 823 F. App'x 824, 828 (11th Cir. 2020) (Smith remains good law after Shular); United States v. Miller, 806 F. App'x 963, 964–65 (11th Cir. 2020) (same); United States v. Campbell, 816 F. App'x 384, 386–87 (11th Cir. 2020) (same).

¹⁸² United States v. Ward, 972 F.3d 364, 365 n.2 (4th Cir. 2020).

¹⁸³ Id. at 376 n.2 (Gregory, C.J., concurring in the judgment).

¹⁸⁴ See United States v. Vickers, 540 F.3d 356, 365 (5th Cir. 2008) (referring to the definition of "drug trafficking offense" in the Commentary to §2L1.2 that mirrors the definition of "controlled substance offense" in §4B1.2(b)); see also United States v. Bass, 996 F.3d 729, 742 (5th Cir. 2021) (upholding predicates under ACCA based on prior precedent and Shular).

3. Offers to Sell a Controlled Substance

The difference in circuits' interpretation of "involving" (ACCA) and "prohibits" (§4B1.2(b)) has also resulted in a circuit conflict specifically related to whether a statute that encompasses an "offer to sell" a controlled substance qualifies as a "controlled substance offense" under the guidelines. The First, Fifth, and Eighth Circuits have held that state statutes that criminalize "offers to sell" qualify under the expansive language of "involving" in the ACCA's definition of a "serious drug offense."¹⁸⁵ On the other hand, the Second, Fifth, Sixth, and Tenth Circuits have held that because §4B1.2(b)'s definition of a "controlled substance offense" does not include "offers to sell," state statutes that criminalize "offers to sell" sweep more broadly than the guidelines definition and are not "controlled substance offenses" under the guidelines.¹⁸⁶

¹⁸⁵ See, e.g., United States v. Block, 935 F.3d 655, 656 (8th Cir. 2019) (prior conviction for delivery of a controlled substance under Texas drug statute, which defines "deliver" to include offering to sell a controlled substance, is "related to or connected with" manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute in the ACCA's definition of a "serious drug offense"); United States v. Whindleton, 797 F.3d 105, 111 (1st Cir. 2015) (New York drug statute that encompasses an offer to sell drugs is sufficiently related to distribution to qualify as a "serious drug offense" under the ACCA based on the expansive language of "involving," even if the defendant never possesses the drugs and the offer is not accepted); United States v. Bynum, 669 F.3d 880, 886 (8th Cir. 2012) (the term "involving" is an expansive term that requires only that the prior Minnesota conviction be "related to or connected with" drug manufacture, distribution, or possession; concluding that "knowingly offering to sell drugs is a 'serious drug offense' under the ACCA"); Vickers, 540 F.3d at 364–66 (Texas drug statute that defines "deliver" to include offering to sell a controlled substance is sufficiently "related to or connected with" drug distribution to qualify as a "serious drug offense" under the ACCA).

¹⁸⁶ See, e.g., United States v. Cavazos, 950 F.3d 329, 334–37 (6th Cir. 2020) (prior conviction for possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance under Texas's drug statute not a "controlled substance offense" under §4B1.2(b), because "offering to sell" a controlled substance constitutes an "attempt," and "attempt" does not qualify as a "controlled substances offense" under §4B1.2(b) because the commentary impermissibly adds to the guidelines' definition); United States v. McKibbin, 878 F.3d 967, 971–72 (10th Cir. 2017) (prior state conviction for distribution of a controlled substance not a "controlled substance offense" because Colorado drug statute defines "sale" of a controlled substance to encompass an "offer to sell"); United States v. Madkins, 866 F.3d 1136, 1145 (10th Cir. 2017) (prior conviction for possession with intent to sell cocaine and marijuana is not a "controlled substance offense" because Kansas drug statute criminalizes "offer to sell" a controlled substance); United States v. Tanksley, 848 F.3d 347, 352 (5th Cir. 2017) (prior conviction for possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance is not a "controlled substance offense" for purposes of enhanced base offense level under §2K2.1 because Texas drug statute encompasses "offer to sell"); United States v. Hinkle, 832 F.3d 569, 571–72 (5th Cir. 2016) (prior conviction for delivery of heroin does not qualify as a "controlled substance offense" because Texas statute criminalizes conduct that include "offer to sell"); see also United States v. Savage, 542 F.3d 959, 964–66 (2d Cir. 2008) (prior conviction for drug sales does not qualify as a "controlled substance offense" because Connecticut statute criminalizes "offer to sell" a controlled substance), superseded as stated in Chery v. Garland, 16 F.4th 980, 984–85 (2d Cir. 2021) (explaining the Connecticut Supreme Court clarified, subsequent to Savage, that an offer requires constructive or attempted transfer).

C. “CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE”

The ACCA defines a “serious drug offense” to include “an offense under State law, involving manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute, a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. [§] 802)), for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed by law.”¹⁸⁷ Under the categorical approach, courts compare the substances controlled under state law to the federal Controlled Substances Act (CSA) schedule to determine whether they are a “controlled substance.”

Circuit courts are split on which version of the CSA schedule to consult when applying the categorical approach for purposes of the ACCA. At least one circuit has held that the CSA schedule in effect at the time of the state conviction apply.¹⁸⁸ Some circuits instead apply the CSA schedule in effect at the time of the federal offense.¹⁸⁹ At least one other circuit has held the CSA schedule in effect at the time of the federal sentencing applies.¹⁹⁰ Recently, the Supreme Court granted certiorari in a consolidated appeal on the question of which version of the federal CSA should be consulted for purposes of the ACCA.¹⁹¹

With respect to the definition of “controlled substance offense” in §4B1.2(b), circuits dispute whether the term “controlled substance” is limited to substances controlled by the federal CSA or whether substances controlled only under state law also qualify. The Second and Ninth Circuits have held that a “controlled substance offense” only includes offenses involving substances controlled by the CSA; the First Circuit has described this approach as ¹⁸⁷ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A).

¹⁸⁸ United States v. Jackson, 55 F.4th 846, 849 (11th Cir. 2022) (sua sponte vacating a prior decision in United States v. Jackson, 36 F.4th 1294 (11th Cir. 2022), to hold the term “‘serious drug offense’ . . . incorporates the version of the controlled-substances list in effect when the defendant was convicted of his prior state drug offense” rather than the version in effect at the time of the federal offense)), cert. granted, 143 S. Ct. 2457 (2023).

¹⁸⁹ United States v. Brown, 47 F.4th 147, 151 (3d Cir. 2022) (to determine whether state conviction is a “serious drug offense” under the ACCA, court is to compare the state drug schedule with the federal drug schedule in effect at the time the defendant committed the federal offense), cert. granted, 143 S. Ct. 2458 (2023); United States v. Perez, 46 F.4th 691, 699 (8th Cir. 2022) (categorical approach requires comparison of state drug schedule in effect at the time of the prior state offense to the federal schedule at the time of the federal offense, and the federal law in effect at the time of sentencing is the relevant definition for purposes of the ACCA); United States v. Williams, 61 F.4th 799, 808 (10th Cir. 2023) (to determine whether state conviction is a “serious drug offense” under the ACCA, court is to compare the state drug schedule with the federal drug schedule in effect at the time the defendant committed the federal offense), petition for cert. filed, No. 22-7736 (U.S. June 8, 2023).

¹⁹⁰ United States v. Hope, 28 F.4th 487, 504–05 (4th Cir. 2022) (prior state conviction for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute in proximity of a school is not a “serious drug offense” under the ACCA; comparing state offense at the time of the state conviction, which included hemp, to federal law at the time of sentencing, which did not include hemp).

¹⁹¹ Jackson, 55 F.4th at 846; Brown, 47 F.4th at 147.

“appealing.”¹⁹² Applying the categorical approach, these circuits compare the substances listed in a state drug schedule to the substances listed in the federal CSA, as with the ACCA. “A state drug statute is . . . categorically overbroad if it includes substances other than those listed in the federal CSA,” and the prior offense is categorically excluded as a predicate.¹⁹³

As to which temporal version of the CSA schedules to use for the comparison, the First and Ninth Circuits have used the schedules from the time of federal sentencing.¹⁹⁴ The Second Circuit has held that courts should not use the CSA schedules from the time of prior conviction but left open the question of whether the schedules from the time of the federal offense or the federal sentencing should apply.¹⁹⁵

By contrast, the Third, Fourth, Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth Circuits have held that a state conviction involving a controlled substance that is not identified in the CSA can qualify as a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2(b).¹⁹⁶ These circuits also apply the categorical approach with respect to §4B1.2(b), generally by determining “not whether the prior conviction was for a certain [generic] offense, but whether the conviction meets some ¹⁹² See United States v. Bautista, 989 F.3d 698, 702 (9th Cir. 2021) (“‘controlled substance’ in §4B1.2(b) refers to a ‘controlled substance’ as defined in the CSA”); United States v. Townsend, 897 F.3d 66, 71 (2d Cir. 2018) (“a ‘controlled substance’ under §4B1.2(b) must refer exclusively to those drugs listed under federal law—that is, the CSA”); see also United States v. Crocco, 15 F.4th 20, 23 (1st Cir. 2021) (describing the approach of the Second and Ninth Circuits as appealing but declining to weigh in on the debate “given the posture of this appeal”), cert. denied, 142 S. Ct. 2877 (2022).

¹⁹³ See Bautista, 989 F.3d at 705 (2017 conviction under Arizona statute criminalizing transportation of hemp as well as marijuana was not a “controlled substance offense” because hemp was not listed in the CSA at the time of federal sentencing); Townsend, 897 F.3d at 74 (conviction under New York statute prohibiting the sale of Human Chorionic Gonadotropin (“HCG”) is not a “controlled substance offense” because HCG is not controlled under the CSA).

¹⁹⁴ Bautista, 989 F.3d at 703 (“a court must ask whether [a] prior crime qualifies as a ‘controlled substance offense’ under the CSA and the corresponding [g]uideline at the time of sentencing”); United States v. Abdulaziz, 998 F.3d 519, 523 (1st Cir. 2021) (“insofar as the CSA’s drug schedules were incorporated into the guideline itself at the time of [the defendant’s] sentencing, . . . we must look to the version of those drug schedules that were ‘in effect’ at that time to determine what constituted a ‘controlled substance’ at that time” (citations omitted)).

¹⁹⁵ United States v. Gibson, 55 F.4th 153, 165 (2d Cir. 2022), adhered to on reh’g, 60 F.4th 720 (2d Cir. 2023) (emphasis added).

¹⁹⁶ See United States v. Lewis, 58 F.4th 764, 771 (3d Cir. 2023) (“‘controlled substance’ under §4B1.2(b) [] is a drug regulated by either state or federal law. It is therefore irrelevant that the New Jersey statute under which Lewis was convicted defined marijuana’ more broadly than federal law.”); United States v. Jones, 15 F.4th 1288, 1295 (10th Cir. 2021) (definition of “controlled substance offense” includes “state-law controlled substance offenses, involving substances not found on the CSA”), cert. denied, 143 S. Ct. 268 (2022); United States v. Henderson, 11 F.4th 713, 718 (8th Cir. 2021) (“There is no requirement that the particular substance underlying the state offense is also controlled under a distinct federal law.”), cert. denied, 142 S. Ct. 1696 (2022); United States v. Ward, 972 F.3d 364, 374 (4th Cir. 2020) (“the Commission has specified that we look to either the federal or state law of conviction to define whether an offense will qualify [as a controlled substance offense]”); Ruth, 966 F.3d 642, 654 (7th Cir. 2020) (“The career-offender guideline defines the term controlled substance offense broadly, and the definition is most plainly read to ‘include state-law offenses[.]’ ” (citation omitted)).

other criterion.”¹⁹⁷ The Third Circuit, for example, has held that the “other criterion” to be compared are whether the prior conviction was (1) “an offense under federal or state law,” (2) “punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year,” (3) that “prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of a controlled substance,” or possession with intent to do so.¹⁹⁸ In assessing whether something was a “controlled substance,” these circuits look to the state law at the time of the prior conviction.¹⁹⁹

¹⁹⁷ Shular v. United States, 140 S. Ct. 779, 783 (2020).

¹⁹⁸ Lewis, 58 F.4th at 768 (citing Shular, 140 S. Ct. at 783); see also Ward, 972 F.3d at 370–71 (identifying two criteria: “punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year,” and “certain prohibited acts, like the distribution of a controlled substance. The prohibited actions follow their readily apparent meaning.”; Virginia statute “has not restricted itself to regulating only those substances listed on the federal drug schedules. Instead, the offense identifies those substances that are ‘regulated’ under Virginia law, which has its own drug schedules. So a conviction under [Virginia law] § 18.2-248 categorically satisfies the second criterion of §4B1.2(b), just as it does the first. And since both criteria are met, a conviction under § 18.2-248 is a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2(b).”); Henderson, 11 F.4th at 716 (“ ‘we apply a categorical approach that looks to the statutory definition of the prior offense.’ ‘[W]hen a federal enhancement provision incorporates state offenses by language other than a reference to generic crime . . . the inquiry is focused on applying the ordinary meaning of the words used in the federal law to the statutory definition of the prior state offense.’ ” (citation omitted)).

But see Ward, 972 F.3d at 384 (Gregory, J., concurring) (“I understand the categorical approach comes with its complications. This is part of the reason there have been consistent calls for Congress or the Supreme Court to alter the framework. Hence, it makes sense why my colleagues would be tempted to apply a new framework that does not follow the outline that the Supreme Court supplied us with in Taylor. But whatever the wisdom of clinging onto the purported plain meaning of terms in the Guidelines, this Court should not rewrite the law.”); United States v. Jones, 32 F.4th 1290, 1291, 1295 (10th Cir.) (Rossman, J., dissenting from denial of petition for rehearing en banc) (“The question in Jones is how to define “controlled substance” in [] §4B1.2(b). Does that term have a uniform definition or does its meaning vary according to the state of conviction? The Jones panel—invoking plain-language analysis—held the latter. I respectfully disagree. Jones cannot be squared with the purpose of the Guidelines, the categorical approach, and the longstanding requirement of national uniformity in federal sentencing law established.”; “What the panel expresses is akin to a policy disagreement, and that cannot justify, let alone authorize, our decision to stray from binding precedent.”), cert denied, 143 S. Ct. 268 (2022).

¹⁹⁹ See Lewis, 58 F.4th at 772 (“controlled substance” is not limited to those drugs under the CSA but also includes drugs regulated by state law at the time of the state conviction); United States v. Clark, 46 F.4th 404, 408 (6th Cir. 2022) (adopting a “time-of-conviction rule” that “flows from the Guidelines’ text”; guideline looks to events occurring in the past), pet. for cert. filed, No. 22-6881 (U.S. Feb. 28, 2023); United States v. Perez, 46 F.4th 691, 703 (8th Cir. 2022) (“And this court has also held that whether a prior state conviction is a controlled substance offense for Guidelines purposes is based on the law at the time of conviction, without reference to current state law.” (citation omitted)); see also United States v. Harbin, 56 F.4th 843 (10th Cir. 2022) (not plain error for the district court to apply §4B1.1 where state law included hemp as a controlled substance at the time of the defendant’s prior state drug conviction, but not at the time of his federal sentencing).