INTRODUCTION

This Primer discusses some sentencing-related immigration issues. It is not intended to serve as a comprehensive compilation of issues or cases.

ALIEN SMUGGLING, TRANSPORTING, AND HARBORING - USSG §2L1.1

This section of the Primer provides a general overview of the statutes, sentencing guidelines, and case law relating to alien smuggling, transporting, and harboring offenses.

I. Statutory Scheme

The primary offenses sentenced under §2L1.1 are those prosecuted under 8 U.S.C. §§ 1324(a) and 1327.

8 U.S.C. § 1324. Bringing in and Harboring Certain Aliens. As explained by the en banc Ninth Circuit, “[i]n ... § 1324, Congress created several discrete immigration offenses, including: (1) bringing an alien to the United States; (2) transporting or moving an illegal alien within the United States; (3) harboring or concealing an illegal alien within the United States; and (4) encouraging or inducing an illegal alien to enter the United States.”¹ The statute also criminalizes engaging in conspiracy to commit any of these acts or the aiding and abetting of any of them. See § 1324(a)(1)(v)(I and II).

8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(1)(A) Bringing in, Transporting, and Harboring Aliens

This subsection prohibits (i) bringing aliens to the United States, (ii) transporting aliens within the United States, (iii) harboring aliens, (iv) encouraging aliens to come to the United States, and (v) conspiracy to commit, and aiding and abetting the commission of, any of these acts.

Transporting, harboring, or encouraging entry without financial gain has a 5-year maximum penalty.² Conspiring to commit any of these crimes, or committing any of these crimes, for financial gain, and bringing aliens to the United States have 10-year statutory maximum penalties.³ Where a defendant causes serious bodily injury or places another person in jeopardy, the statutory maximum is 20 years.⁴ And where the crime causes the death of another, the defendant is subject to a statutory maximum of life in prison.⁵ All of these maximum penalties may be enhanced an additional 10 years in cases of commercial transportation of large groups in a life-threatening manner.⁶ A defendant who aids and abets another in the commission of one of these offenses is subject to a 5-year statutory maximum.⁷ Because these statutory enhancements are based on facts other than the defendant's criminal record, they must be charged in the indictment and either pleaded to or found beyond a reasonable doubt by a jury.⁸

8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(2)⁹

Bringing in Aliens

This crime is similar to § 1324(a)(1)(A)(i) in that it also prohibits bringing an alien to the United States. The main difference is in the penalty provision. Pursuant to § 1324(a)(2), where the alien is brought into the United States but is not presented to immigration officials, a first or second offense carries a 10-year maximum.¹⁰ Where this crime is committed for profit or with reason to believe that the alien will commit a felony, the defendant is subject to a 3-year mandatory minimum and a 10-year statutory maximum.¹¹

Multiple violations of § 1324(a)(2) committed for profit or with reason to believe that the alien will commit a felony invoke further enhancements, including a mandatory

Hilario-Hilario*, 529 F.3d 65, 69 (1st Cir. 2008) (“One who aids and abets is normally liable as a principal, 18 U.S.C. § 2 (2000), but the smuggling statute prescribes in certain cases a lower sentence for mere aiders and abettors. 8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(1)(B).”)

minimum 3- or 5-year penalty.¹² Note that “the sentence is calculated ‘for each alien with respect to whom a violation . . . occurs.’”¹³ Thus, courts have treated each alien as a separate violation and have applied the enhanced penalty based on the number of aliens.¹⁴ Although this recidivist provision raises the statutory maximum, because the increase is based on criminal history, it need neither be pleaded in the indictment nor found by a jury.¹⁵

Finally, as with § 1324(a)(1), the statutory maximums set forth here may also be enhanced an additional 10 years for commercial transportation of large groups in a life-threatening manner.¹⁶

8 U.S.C. § 1324(a)(3)

Employing Aliens, and Bringing in Aliens for Employment

This statute prohibits hiring at least ten aliens during any 12-month period with actual knowledge that they are aliens.

This offense has a 5-year maximum penalty. As with the sections described above, the statutory maximums set forth here may also be enhanced up to 10 years for: an offense that was part of ongoing commercial organization in which aliens were transported in groups of 10 or more and the manner of transportation endangered the aliens’ lives.¹⁷ The enhancement also applies where the aliens in question presented a life threatening health risk to people in the United States.¹⁸

8 U.S.C. § 1327

Aiding or Assisting Certain Aliens to Enter. This statute prescribes a 10-year statutory maximum penalty for knowingly aiding certain aliens (previously convicted for aggravated felonies) to enter the United States. To be convicted, a defendant need not know that the alien in question had a prior felony conviction. As the Eleventh Circuit has observed: “[T]he district court properly instructed the jury that § 1327 did not require [defendant] to know that the alien...had a prior felony conviction but only that the alien he aided or assisted in entering the United States was inadmissible....§ 1327 requires only that [a defendant] knew the alien he aided or assisted was inadmissible at some point before the alien sought to enter the United States.”¹⁹

II. Guideline Overview: USSG §2L1.1

A. Base Offense Level

The base offense level for alien smuggling offenses depends on the statute of conviction. Violations of § 1324 have a base offense level of 12.²⁰ Violations of § 1327 have a base level of 23 or 25, depending on the immigration status and/or criminal history of the alien being smuggled.²¹

B. Specific Offense Characteristics

Beyond the base offense level, §2L1.1 has nine specific offense characteristics:

- 1) defendant’s prior record of immigration crimes;²²
- 2) transportation of an unaccompanied minor;²⁴
- 3) # of aliens smuggled, harbored, or transported;²⁶
- 4) substantial risk of death or serious bodily injury;²⁷
- 5) commercial transportation of large groups in a life-threatening manner;²⁹
- 6) Use of a dangerous weapon;²³
- 7) Involuntary detention of alien;²⁵
- 8) infliction of serious bodily injury;
- 9) “other than for profit” or involved family members.²⁸

C. Cross Reference

If the conduct resulted in the death of another, the cross reference directs that the appropriate homicide guideline be applied.³⁰

²⁹ USSG §2L1.1(b)(9).

³⁰ USSG §2L1.1(c)(1).

III. Specific Guideline Application Issues

- A. Lack of Profit Motive - §2L1.1(b)(1): If (A) the offense was committed other than for profit, or the offense involved the smuggling, transporting, or harboring only of the defendant's spouse or child . . . , and (B) the base offense level is determined under subsection (a)(2), decrease by 3 levels.

The defendant has the burden of establishing that he is entitled to this reduction.³¹ For example, the reduction may not apply where the defendant's only compensation was free transportation: "[A] defendant who commits the relevant offense 'solely in return for his own entry' may nevertheless be found to have committed the offense 'for profit.'"³²

- B. Number of Aliens - §2L1.1(b)(2): If the offense involved the smuggling, transporting, or harboring of six or more unlawful aliens, increase

The table in §2L1.1(b)(2) provides increases of 3, 6, or 9 levels based on the number of aliens smuggled, harbored, or transported. Consistent with this graduated scheme, Application Note 3(C) provides that "[a]n upward departure may be warranted [where] . . . [t]he offense involved substantially more than 100 aliens."³³ The Second Circuit has upheld an upward departure based on 300 aliens.³⁴ Based upon its observation that the guideline's incremental punishment enhancements relied on a geometric exponential of four, the Ninth Circuit has held that 180 aliens were not "substantially more than 100 aliens."³⁵

Because this guideline is listed in §3D1.2(d), the relevant conduct for this guideline includes "all acts and omissions . . . that were part of the same course of conduct or common

³² U.S. v. Juan-Manuel, 222 F.3d 480, 485 (8th Cir. 2000) (affirming denial of reduction where defendant drove van carrying aliens to pay off debt to coyote who brought him to U.S.); see also U.S. v. Perez-Ruiz, 169 F.3d 1075, 1076 (7th Cir. 1999) (affirming denial of enhancement where defendant "received in-kind compensation - transportation from Arizona to Chicago - for his role in the offense"). The holding in Juan-Manuel is in contrast to pre-1997 commentary, which stated that "'[f]or profit' means for financial gain or commercial advantage, but this definition does not include a defendant who commits the offense solely in return for his own entry or transportation."

³³ USSG §2L1.1, comment. (n.3(C)).

³⁴ U.S. v. Moe, 65 F.3d 245, 251 (2d Cir. 1995); see also U.S. v. Shan Wei Yu, 484 F.3d 979 (8th Cir. 2007) (affirming upward departure based on transporting 1000 aliens).

³⁵ U.S. v. Nagra, 147 F.3d 875, 886 (9th Cir. 1998). The court reasoned that the guideline's stated enhancement would apply to 100-399 aliens.

scheme or plan as the offense of conviction.”³⁶ Thus, a court may determine the number of aliens based on all acts. For example, recently the Fifth Circuit reviewed a case in which a commercial truck driver smuggled 74 aliens in his tractor-trailer during which 19 aliens died from dehydration and asphyxiation.³⁷ The district court had applied a 9-level §2L1.1(b)(2) enhancement (“100 or more aliens”) based on the defendant’s earlier transportation of approximately 60 additional aliens.³⁸ Noting the numerous ways that conduct can be considered “relevant conduct” for sentencing³⁹ and the specific relationship between §3D1.2(d) and §2L1.1,⁴⁰ the court concluded that the district court did not clearly err when including the earlier transportation (of the 60-odd aliens) as relevant conduct as part of a “common scheme or plan:

It was not clear error for the district court to include [defendant’s] first trip, during which he transported approximately 60 unlawful aliens, as part of the relevant conduct for applying § 2L1.1(b)(2). Ample evidence supports a conclusion that the two trips were part of a common scheme or plan. The same accomplices...were involved in both trips, and...testimony established the number of aliens transported during the first trip. Both trips were for the purpose of transporting aliens and were undertaken with the same modus operandi-unlawful aliens were loaded into Williams's trailer....The Guidelines requirement to establish a common scheme or plan is satisfied here because the offenses are “substantially connected to each other by at least one common factor.” Accordingly, the district court did not commit clear error in enhancing [defendant’s] sentences by nine levels under § 2L1.1(b)(2)(C).⁴¹

Courts occasionally have addressed the quantum of evidence needed to establish the enhancement. In one case, the court affirmed a finding based on a list of names in a ledger found in a “stash house.”⁴² In another case, the circuit court affirmed an estimate of the total number of aliens smuggled based on the assumption that on each of 15 trips, defendants used children to smuggle in two aliens posing as the children’s parents.⁴³

⁴³ U.S. v. Cabrera, 288 F.3d 163 (5th Cir. 2002).

C. Creating Risk of Injury - §2L1.1(b)(6): If the offense involved intentionally or recklessly creating a substantial risk of death or serious bodily injury to another person, increase by 2 levels.

The application note states that this enhancement “includes a wide variety of conduct” and cites a number of examples: “transporting persons in the trunk or engine compartment of a motor vehicle, carrying substantially more passengers than the rated capacity of a motor vehicle or vessel, or harboring persons in a crowded, dangerous, or inhumane condition.”⁴⁴ This enhancement “is not limited to the examples provided in the commentary.”⁴⁵ The Ninth Circuit has explained that in each of these situations, “the means of travel either exacerbates the likelihood of an accident, subjects the passenger to a risk of injury even during an accident-free ride, or both.”⁴⁶ Note that while many of these cases arise when defendants transported aliens in vehicles, this enhancement can also apply to defendants who lead aliens into the United States on foot, in which case the Fifth Circuit has looked at the “entire picture” in deciding whether to apply the enhancement.⁴⁷

A number of published circuit court opinions apply this enhancement, and some of these are set forth in Table 1 in the Appendix. Note that there is some disagreement as to whether unrestrained passengers lying on the floor of an enclosed van satisfy this enhancement.⁴⁸ Also, to qualify for this enhancement, either the defendant must have created the risk of danger,⁴⁹ or the risk must have, at least, been “reasonably foreseeable in connection with that criminal activity.”⁵⁰ It does not matter that an alien faced great risk prior to joining a transporting conspiracy involving the defendant —“only that part of [the alien’s] experience after he joined [the defendant’s] group can properly be assigned to [the defendant] for purposes of sentencing.”⁵¹

⁴⁶ U.S. v. Torres-Flores, 502 F.3d 885, 890 (9th Cir. 2007) (emphasis in original).

⁵¹ U.S. v. Garza, 541 F.3d 290, 293 (5th Cir. 2008).

Notably, although “[r]easonable minds could differ as to the severity of the overcrowding in the vans and the resulting degree of risk,”⁵² courts have identified factors to consider when applying this enhancement in vehicle cases.

1. Fifth Circuit

The Fifth Circuit has indicated that this enhancement does not apply when “[t]he only dangers were the same dangers arising from a passenger not wearing a seatbelt in a moving vehicle.”⁵³ It has articulated five factors to consider under §2L1.1(b)(6): “the availability of oxygen, exposure to temperature extremes, the aliens’ ability to communicate with the driver of the vehicle, their ability to exit the vehicle quickly, and the danger to them if an accident occurs.”⁵⁴

2. Ninth Circuit

The Ninth Circuit has noted:

Every passenger traveling on our highways faces a small, but non-trivial, risk of death or injury. This baseline risk is inherent in all vehicular travel and must therefore be disregarded in determining whether the offense was committed in a manner that involved a “substantial risk of death or serious bodily injury to another person.” We focus on the ways in which the method of transporting the alien increased the risk of death or injury beyond that faced by a normal passenger traveling on our streets and highways.⁵⁵

Consistent with this observation, the Ninth Circuit has identified a number of factors that could increase this risk:

(1) The driver could increase the likelihood of an accident by taking a dangerous route (e.g., off-road) or driving in a dangerous manner (e.g., recklessly or drunk); (2) the method of transportation could increase the likelihood of an accident (e.g., a severely overloaded vehicle); (3) the method of transportation could increase the risk of an injury even in the absence of an accident (e.g., passengers transported with insufficient ventilation or subject to injury from moving mechanical parts); or (4) the method of transportation could increase the risk that an accident, if it should occur, would cause injury or death (e.g., passengers transported in a manner that makes them more likely to be injured by crumpled metal or shattered glass than if they had been seated normally).⁵⁶

Thus, it will apply the enhancement “only when the circumstances increased the likelihood of an accident or the chance of injury without an accident.”⁵⁷

3. Tenth Circuit

The Tenth Circuit has indicated that the inquiry under this enhancement “essentially equates to a totality of the circumstances test.”⁵⁸ Under this analysis, the court “must disregard the ‘baseline risk . . . inherent in all vehicular travel,’ delving instead into whether the defendant’s conduct or his chosen method of transportation ‘increase[d] the risk [of] an accident’ and whether the method of transportation exacerbated the risk of death or injury in the event of an accident.”⁵⁹

D. Bodily Injury - §2L1.1(b)(7): If any person died or sustained bodily injury, increase the offense level according to the seriousness of the injury.⁶⁰

Although “the death or injury . . . must be causally connected to dangerous conditions created by the unlawful conduct,”⁶¹ courts have typically not required that the defendant be the direct cause of the injury or death.⁶² For example, it is not necessary for the defendant to be the driver.⁶³ Furthermore, the enhancement does not require intent to cause injury or death.⁶⁴ The Eleventh Circuit recently held that “to apply the § 2L1.1(b)(7) enhancement it must be reasonably foreseeable to a defendant that his actions or the actions of any other member of the smuggling operation could create the sort of dangerous circumstances that would be likely to result in serious injury or death.”⁶⁵ The court specifically rejected the suggestion that the enhancement requires that the defendant's individual actions must be the proximate cause of the death or serious injury, although it did note a circuit split of authority on that issue.⁶⁶

Courts have upheld the application of both §2L1.1(b)(6) (Creating Risk of Injury) and §2L1.1(b)(7) (Bodily Injury) in a single case over claims that applying both enhancements reflects impermissible double counting. The Tenth Circuit stated: “[§2L1.1(b)(6)] allows for an enhancement based upon ‘the defendant’s intentional or reckless conduct, with no consideration of the outcome;’ whereas [§2L1.1(b)(7)] provides for an enhancement based upon the ‘outcome...with no consideration of the defendant’s intentional or reckless conduct.’”⁶⁷

E. Involuntary Detention - §2L1.1(b)(8)(A): If an alien was involuntarily detained through coercion or threat, or in connection with a demand for payment, (i) after the alien was smuggled into the United States; or (ii) while the alien was transported or harbored in the United States, increase by 2 levels. If the resulting offense level is less than level 18, increase to level 18.

The Tenth Circuit approved the application of §2L1.1(b)(8) where an armed defendant participated in taking the immigrants’s shoes and personal belongings, forcing them to call family members or friends to ask for more money under the threat of dismemberment, and keeping them in a van and making them urinate in a bottle.⁶⁸

IV. Chapter 3 Adjustments

A. Vulnerable Victim - §3A1.1(b)(1)

Courts have examined whether an increase under §3A1.1 (Vulnerable Victim) is appropriate in an alien smuggling case. Relying directly on Fifth Circuit jurisprudence, the Eight Circuit has recently observed that “the victims of the crime of harboring illegal aliens are, by definition, illegal aliens, and as such, the workers' immigration status does not distinguish them from other potential victims of the crime. Thus, the workers' immigration status did not alone make them more vulnerable in this case.”⁶⁹ In other words, the relevant question is whether a particular victim of the smuggling offense is “more unusually vulnerable” than any other such

Medina-Argueta*, 454 F.3d 479, 482 (5th Cir. 2006) (“This court has determined that, in order for an illegally smuggled alien involved in a violation of 8 U.S.C. § 1324 to be a vulnerable victim, he must be ‘more unusually vulnerable to being held captive than would be any other smuggled alien.’ ” (Internal citation omitted.))

victim.⁷⁰ The Fifth Circuit has observed that smuggled aliens typically are not “victims” “because they voluntarily joined the scheme as willing participants as to its objective—to be brought illegally into the United States.”⁷¹ It has noted that the “general characteristics commonly held by aliens seeking to be illegally smuggled” do not create a vulnerability that warrants an upward departure.⁷² However, the Fifth Circuit has also recognized that smuggled aliens who were “detained against their will after being transported” are “victims” for purposes of §3A1.1(b)(1).⁷³

B. Role in the Offense - §§3B1.1, 3B1.2

Commentary to section 2L1.1 invites consideration of a defendant’s aggravating role in the offense, but states that for purposes of §3B1.1 (leadership role), the smuggled aliens are not considered “participants” “unless they actively assisted in the smuggling, transporting, or harboring of others.”⁷⁴ Some courts have applied §3B1.1 to increase sentences,⁷⁵ and others routinely deny reductions for minor participant under §3B1.2.⁷⁶

C. Special Skill - §3B1.3

The First Circuit has held that piloting a simple wooden boat without benefit of

Angeles-Mendoza*, 407 F.3d 742, 754 (5th Cir. 2005) (defendant was not a minor participant where he was an enforcer at the stash house and “had knowledge of the scope and structure of the enterprise”); *U.S. v. navigation aids on choppy seas under the direction of another does not qualify as a special skill.⁷⁷ But the Eleventh Circuit has recently held that piloting an overloaded, “Scarab” model, high-performance boat at night while evading a Coast Guard vessel does qualify as a special skill.⁷⁸

D. Reckless Flight - §3C1.2

The Ninth Circuit held that the enhancement for reckless flight does not apply if the act of fleeing was used to enhance the sentence under §2L1.1 for creating a risk of injury to others.⁷⁹ Here, the defendant, who was smuggling two aliens (hidden behind her hatchback car’s backseat) across the border, drove away rapidly from the checkpoint after being identified for inspection. Although law enforcement pursued her, she evaded them—until her car hit a highway median and she stalled. When the authorities approached, she ran from the stalled car but was apprehended. After the district court imposed a §2L1.1 “substantial risk of death or bodily injury” enhancement and a §3C1.2 “reckless endangerment during flight” enhancement, the Ninth Circuit reversed. The court noted that the district court had impermissibly based both enhancements upon the defendant’s “flight” conduct and concluded that it was improper to assess a §3C1.2 enhancement for the same conduct: “It is clear from the district court's ruling that the sole basis for the application of the [serious bodily injury] enhancement was [defendant]’s reckless flight. We are bound to follow the application notes...and the directive is clear: “If [a substantial risk of serious bodily injury” enhancement] applies solely on the basis of conduct related to fleeing from a law enforcement officer, do not apply an adjustment from § 3C1.2.”⁸⁰

E. Departures and Variances

1. Multiple Deaths. The Tenth Circuit affirmed an upward departure where multiple deaths resulted from defendant’s conduct.⁸¹
2. Duration of the Harboring. The Fourth Circuit affirmed an upward departure for a harboring conspiracy that went on for 19 years.⁸²
3. Extent of Detention. The Tenth Circuit affirmed a variance above a guideline range that included an enhancement under §2L1.1(b)(8) because the defendant created an extreme “four-day-long hostage situation,” rather than “an isolated, minor detention of limited duration.”⁸³

ILLEGAL ENTRY OR REENTRY - USSG §2L1.2

Federal law prohibits foreign nationals from entering the United States without permission. A conviction for a first offense of illegal entry is a misdemeanor that is not covered by the guidelines.⁸⁴ Subsequent entries,⁸⁵ reentry after deportation,⁸⁶ and remaining in the United States after being ordered deported⁸⁷ are felonies covered by USSG §2L1.2.⁸⁸ Section 2L1.2 provides for an enhanced sentence when the prior deportation was preceded by certain types of convictions. This section addresses application issues arising under §2L1.2.

I. Statutory Scheme

All the enhancements for illegal entry and reentry—under both the statute and the guidelines—are based on a defendant’s criminal history, and the means by which these enhancements are applied is the same in both contexts.

8 U.S.C. § 1325(a)

Improper Entry By Alien (Illegal Entry)

This statute prohibits entry (1) at an improper time or place, (2) without inspection, or (3) based on a false or misleading statement.

The penalty range for this offense depends on whether it is the defendant’s first violation of § 1325(a). If this is the defendant’s first violation of § 1325(a), then the statute carries a 6-month maximum penalty, and the guidelines do not apply. If this is a subsequent violation of § 1325(a), then the statute carries a 2-year maximum penalty, and the court should apply § 2L1.2. Because the enhanced penalty is based on a defendant’s prior criminal record, it does not need to be indicted or found by a jury.⁸⁹

Reentry of Removed Aliens (Illegal Reentry)

This statute prohibits an alien’s unauthorized return to the United States after deportation, removal, exclusion, or denial of admission.

⁸⁴ 8 U.S.C. § 1325(a).

⁸⁶ 8 U.S.C. § 1326.

⁸⁷ 8 U.S.C. § 1253.

⁸⁸ This guideline has been applied to a conviction for false claim of citizenship in the course of reentering the country. See U.S. v. Castaneda-Gallardo, 951 F.2d 1451 (5th Cir. 1992).

⁸⁹ Almendarez-Torres v. U.S., 523 U.S. 224 (1998).

As with § 1325(a), the statutory maximum term of imprisonment for illegal reentry depends on the defendant's prior criminal record. In general, an alien who has no criminal history is subject to a 2-year maximum.⁹⁰ A 10-year maximum applies if the defendant's deportation was (a) preceded by a conviction for "three or more misdemeanors involving, drugs, crimes against the person, or both"; (b) preceded by any felony; or (c) based on certain, specified grounds.⁹¹ If the prior conviction was an "aggravated felony" as defined by 8 U.S.C. § 1103(a)(43), the statutory maximum is 20 years.⁹²

For statutory enhancements based on a defendant's prior criminal record, the fact of the prior conviction need not be alleged in the indictment or found by a jury.⁹³ This is not the case for enhancements based on a defendant's prior deportation, which must be found by a jury.⁹⁴ Under Apprendi, for a defendant to be eligible for an enhanced § 1326 statutory maximum, the government's indictment must allege not only a prior removal and subsequent reentry, but also the date of that removal or the fact that it occurred after a qualifying prior conviction.⁹⁵ But an indictment's failure to do so does not rise to structural error; rather, any such defects are subject to harmless error review.⁹⁶

Thus, the Ninth Circuit has concluded that an indictment will support a § 1326(b) sentencing enhancement if it alleges a removal date because this action will allow a sentencing court to "to compare that date to the dates of any

New Jersey*, 530 U.S. 466 (2000) (stating that the fact of a prior conviction need not be found by a jury); see also U.S. v. Aparco-Centeno, 280 F.3d 1084 (6th Cir. 2002) (holding that prior convictions were not elements but were sentencing factors for enhancement that did not have to be set forth in the indictment); U.S. v. Velasquez-Reyes, 427 F.3d 1227 (9th Cir. 2005).

⁹⁵ U.S. v. Calderon-Segura, 512 F.3d 1104, 1111 (9th Cir. 2008)

⁹⁶ See, e.g., U.S. v. Salazar-Lopez, 506 F.3d 748 (9th Cir. 2007) (rejecting a "structural error" analysis and instead concluding that such error "can be adequately handled under the harmless error framework.").

qualifying felony convictions to determine whether the sentence-enhancing sequence [whereby that removal must follow the earlier qualifying conviction] is satisfied.”⁹⁷ That court also held that the indictment need not include the removal date if the indictment language otherwise alleges facts establishing that the removal occurred after a qualifying conviction.⁹⁸

Furthermore, the Fifth Circuit has concluded that, when an indictment is silent as to a removal date but a defendant admits PSR facts that establish the critical “sequencing” information, the resulting sentencing enhancement survives even plain error review.⁹⁹

Courts have held that it does not violate the Equal Protection Clause to enhance a defendant’s sentence based on prior convictions.¹⁰⁰

8 U.S.C. § 1253

Failure to Depart¹⁰¹

This statute makes it a crime for an alien who has been ordered to depart the country to (A) remain in the country after the removal order is entered, (B) fail to arrange for departure, (C) prevent or hamper departure, or (D) fail to appear as required by the departure removal order.

This statute generally imposes a 4-year statutory maximum penalty, although prior convictions under certain specified statutes will invoke a 10-year statutory maximum.¹⁰²

Calderon-Segura*, 512 F.3d 1104, 1111 (9th Cir. 2008) (“[I]n order for a defendant to be eligible for an enhanced statutory maximum under § 1326(b), the indictment must allege, in addition to the facts of prior removal and subsequent reentry, either the date of the prior removal or that it occurred after a qualifying prior conviction.”) (emphasis in original) citing *U.S. v. ¹⁰¹ One subsection of this statute, 8 U.S.C. § 1253(b), prohibits a false statement or failure to comply with an investigation during the period following an alien’s removal order while he is still in the United States under supervision. This crime is a misdemeanor, punishable by up to a year in prison.

¹⁰² 8 U.S.C. § 1253(a)(1). The 10-year statutory maximum applies to individuals deported pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(1)(E) (for helping an alien enter the United States), § 1227(a)(2) (for certain criminal offenses), § 1227(a)(3) (for failure to register and falsification of documents), and § 1227(a)(4) (for security threats).

II. Guideline Overview: USSG §2L1.2

A. Ex Post Facto Considerations

The Commission’s amendment to §2L1.2 may raise ex post facto issues. In general, “[t]he court shall use the Guidelines Manual in effect on the date that the defendant is sentenced” unless doing so “would violate the ex post facto clause of the United States Constitution,” in which case, “the court shall use the Guidelines Manual in effect on the date that the offense of conviction was committed.”¹⁰³ Notably, courts have held that illegal reentry is a continuing offense that continues until the alien is “found” in the United States, and that, therefore, a court can apply the Guidelines Manual in effect when the alien is “found,” as opposed to the Manual in effect when the alien reenters the United States, without violating the ex post facto clause.¹⁰⁴ The Fifth Circuit has held that “a previously deported alien is ‘found in’ the United States when his physical presence is discovered and noted by the immigration authorities, and the knowledge of the illegality of his presence, through the exercise of diligence typical of law enforcement authorities, can reasonably be attributed to the immigration authorities.”¹⁰⁵ An alien can be “found in” the United States when a law enforcement officer participating in the cross-designation program under 8 U.S.C. § 1357(g) (the 287(g) program) issues an immigration detainer.¹⁰⁶

B. Base Offense Level

Guideline 2L1.2's base offense level is 8.¹⁰⁷

C. Specific Offense Characteristic

The specific offense characteristic at (b)(1) is based upon a defendant’s criminal history that predates his removal order.¹⁰⁸ This “tiered” enhancement assigns a 16-, 12-, 8-, or 4-level increase, depending on the nature (and/or quantity) of the defendant’s prior convictions. Effective November 1, 2011, convictions can be enhanced under subsections (b)(1)(A) and (B) with the respective 16- and 12-level enhancements if they receive criminal history points under Chapter IV (Criminal History and Criminal Livelihood); if they do not, then respective 12- and 8-level

enhancements will apply.¹⁰⁹ Because an applicable offense level may substantially overstate or understate the seriousness of a previous conviction, an upward or downward departure may be warranted.¹¹⁰

The following categories of convictions receive a 16-level enhancement at (b)(1)(A) regardless of the length of the prior conviction: crimes of violence, firearms offenses, child pornography offenses, national security or terrorism offenses, human trafficking offenses, or alien smuggling offenses.¹¹¹ A prior drug trafficking offense also receives a 16-level enhancement if the sentence imposed was greater than 13 months.¹¹²

A felony drug trafficking offense that received a sentence of less than 13 months qualifies for a 12-level enhancement.¹¹³

Certain temporal limitations on the 16- and 12-level enhancements. Generally speaking, §2L1.2 looks to the nature of previous convictions when assessing the 16- and 12-level enhancements. But when applied to previous drug-trafficking convictions, the guideline also looks to two other factors: the length of the sentence imposed and the timing of the sentence's imposition. Where an imposed sentence is greater than 13 months, the 16-level enhancement may apply; where an imposed sentence is 13 months or less, a 12-level enhancement may apply.

An additional consideration comes into play under the following (relatively rare) circumstance: a defendant's conviction(s) result in a probated sentence; the defendant is deported or removed; the defendant returns; his earlier probation is revoked and a sentence is imposed. The circuit courts are split over whether such a sentence—which occurs after the deportation or removal—“relates back” to the date of the initial (pre-deportation or removal) conviction so as to support the 16- or 12-level enhancements. The Second Circuit has held that the enhancements apply in those circumstances,¹¹⁴ while the Fifth, Seventh, Tenth, and Eleventh Circuits have held that they do not.¹¹⁵

A conviction for a crime that is an “aggravated felony” that has not received a 16- or 12-level increase at (b)(1)(A) or (b)(1)(B) receives an 8-level enhancement at (b)(1)(C).¹¹⁶ The term “aggravated felony” is defined at 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) which is set out and discussed below.

Any other felony receives a 4-level enhancement.¹¹⁷

A 4-level enhancement also applies where the defendant has had three prior misdemeanor convictions for drug trafficking offenses or crimes of violence.¹¹⁸

III. Identifying Prior Convictions

A. General Principles

The enhancements for reentry offenses are based on a defendant's criminal history; therefore the court must decide what prior convictions might qualify for an enhancement. A few principles are worth remembering, but these can be summarized in a single statement: consider any adult conviction that was final before the defendant's most recent deportation.

1. Only count convictions that were final before the defendant was ordered deported

To be considered as the basis for an enhancement, a conviction must precede a deportation.¹¹⁹ It does not matter that the defendant "remained" in the United States following a prior conviction – the conviction must precede deportation to qualify for an enhancement.¹²⁰ A conviction is final for purposes of §2L1.2 even if an appeal of the conviction is still pending when the defendant is deported.¹²¹

2. The date an order of removal is reinstated constitutes a new deportation

The law authorizes immigration authorities to reinstate a prior removal order.¹²² Although this statute states that a "prior order of removal is reinstated from its original date," a removal based on the reinstatement is treated as a separate removal for purposes of determining whether a conviction happened prior to deportation under § 1326.¹²³ Thus, the enhancement

¹¹⁷ USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(D).

¹¹⁸ USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(E).

¹¹⁹ USSG §2L1.2(b)(1). While a conviction sustained after the defendant was deported should not trigger an enhancement under §2L1.2, it may still be counted for purposes of calculating the defendant's criminal history. See, e.g., U.S. v. Cuevas, 75 F.3d 778 (1st Cir. 1996) (adding two criminal history points for committing the offense while on probation for a crime committed after deportation on the ground that the reentry conviction was for being "found" in the United States, by which time defendant was on probation).

¹²¹ U.S. v. Saenz-Gomez, 472 F.3d 791 (10th Cir. 2007).

¹²² 8 U.S.C. § 1231(a)(5).

¹²³ See, e.g., U.S. v. Nava-Perez, 242 F.3d 277, 279 (5th Cir. 2001) (holding that the enhanced penalty under § 1326(b)(2) was proper where a defendant was removed in 1997, reentered the United States illegally, was convicted of an aggravated felony, was removed pursuant to the reinstated removal order from 1997, entered the United States once again, and was convicted for illegal reentry; the court stated that "the statute plainly contemplates, applies where a conviction follows the original deportation order but precedes a subsequent reinstatement of that order.¹²⁴ For purpose of criminal sanctions, “what matters” is “the alien’s physical removal.”¹²⁵ Similarly, the Ninth Circuit has held that “removal by an immigration officer pursuant to a prior removal order” is a separate removal for purposes of §2L1.2.¹²⁶

3. Qualifying adult convictions

In contrast to the criminal history guidelines in Chapter 4, which exclude convictions that were imposed more than 5, 10, or 15 years earlier,¹²⁷ as of this writing there is no current time limit on when a prior conviction must have been imposed to be counted under §2L1.2.¹²⁸ But effective November 1, 2011, this will likely change. As a result of a proposed guideline amendment, on that date convictions can be enhanced under subsections (b)(1)(A) and (B) with the respective 16- and 12-level enhancements only if they receive criminal history points under Chapter IV (Criminal History and Criminal Livelihood); if they do not, then respective 12- and 8-level enhancements will apply.¹²⁹ In further contrast to the criminal history guidelines, which consider juvenile convictions within the past five years,¹³⁰ “a conviction for an offense committed before the defendant was eighteen years of age” does not qualify for an enhancement “unless such conviction is classified as an adult conviction under the laws of the jurisdiction in which the defendant was convicted.”¹³¹ The conviction for which the defendant receives an enhancement need not be the most recent conviction,¹³² nor must the defendant have been deported as a result of that conviction.¹³³

4. Delayed adjudications may qualify as convictions

A deferred adjudication qualifies as a prior conviction under §2L1.2.¹³⁴ A guilty plea held after the reentry, a second removal under the reinstated prior order”) (emphasis in original).

¹²⁴ See, e.g., U.S. v. Diaz-Luevano, 494 F.3d 1159 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding that 1998 conviction that followed 1996 deportation but preceded 2000 reinstatement was “prior” to deportation for purpose of 2004 reentry prosecution).

in abeyance qualifies as a “conviction” under §2L1.2.¹³⁵

5. Vacating a conviction may disqualify it from consideration

The guidelines do not expressly address expunged or vacated convictions. Some courts have held that a conviction that was vacated prior to sentencing on technical grounds should be considered under §2L1.2.¹³⁶ The enhancement, however, would not apply if the conviction was vacated on “a showing of actual innocence”¹³⁷ or a showing “that the conviction had been improperly obtained.”¹³⁸

6. Prior convictions need not be charged to qualify for enhancement

The fact of a prior conviction need not be pled or proven beyond a reasonable doubt.¹³⁹ Thus, a prior conviction that would support an enhanced sentence under either the statutes or the guidelines does not need to be identified until the time of sentencing.¹⁴⁰ Of course, as in any case, a defendant’s sentence is circumscribed by any statutory maximum applicable to the statute charged in the indictment.

7. Is the prior conviction a felony?

Of the five enhancements called for in §2L1.2, four are triggered by a defendant’s previous “felony” conviction(s).¹⁴¹ But while §2L1.2 unremarkably defines “felony” as “any federal, state, or local offense punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year,”¹⁴² this ¹³⁸ Campbell, 167 F.3d at 98.

¹³⁹ See, e.g., Almendarez-Torres v. U.S., 523 U.S. 224 (1995).

¹⁴⁰ Note that this rule does not apply to the fact of deportation, so that a statutory enhancement based on a finding that a defendant had been removed on a particular date may violate the Sixth Amendment if the date of deportation was not admitted by the defendant in the plea. See, e.g., U.S. v. Rojas-Luna, 522 F.3d 502 (5th Cir. 2008); U.S. v. Covian-Sandoval, 462 F.3d 1090, 1097 (9th Cir. 2006) (holding that the Almendarez-Torres exception is “limited to prior convictions” and does not apply to the fact or date of the prior removal).

¹⁴¹ USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(A), (B), (C), and (D). The fifth enhancement—§2L1.2(b)(1)(E)—allows for a 4-level upward adjustment when a defendant’s previous convictions include “three or more misdemeanors for convictions that are crimes of violence or drug trafficking offenses.”

definition—and §2L1.2's definition of “aggravated felony”—expand the type of convictions that qualify for the guideline’s felony enhancement(s) to include otherwise qualifying state misdemeanor offenses:

1. State misdemeanors that are punishable by more than one year. If a state misdemeanor is punishable by more than a year in prison, §2L1.2's definition of felony may well treat that conviction as qualifying for a guideline felony enhancement.¹⁴³ For the same reasons, a prior state court misdemeanor conviction can trigger § 1326(b)(1)'s 10-year statutory maximum if, under federal law, it is a felony, i.e., “an offense punishable by a maximum term of imprisonment of more than one year.”¹⁴⁴

2. “Aggravated felony” as used in §2L1.2(b)(1)(C) and 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) can encompass misdemeanor offenses. Guideline 2L1.2 levies an 8-level enhancement where a defendant’s previous conviction qualifies as an “aggravated felony” pursuant to Title 8, United States Code, Section 1101(a)(43).¹⁴⁵ Subsection (a)(43) provides that an aggravate felony, includes, among other things, “a crime of violence (as defined in section 16 of Title 18, but not including a purely political offense) for which the term of imprisonment [is] at least one year.”¹⁴⁶ Thus, as numerous circuits have noted, this definition may encompass state misdemeanor offenses that are themselves also punishable by up to a year’s imprisonment.¹⁴⁷

In short, for §2L1.2 enhancement purposes, the focus is generally on the nature of the offense and the length of sentence that could be imposed.

The guideline definition of a felony can be difficult to apply when a crime is punishable either as a felony or a misdemeanor.¹⁴⁸ In these cases, courts will examine the court record to determine whether the crime—often known as a “wobbler”¹⁴⁹—was a felony or misdemeanor.¹⁵⁰ Sometimes, the length of sentence imposed may provide a clue.¹⁵¹ In one case, the Tenth Circuit held that an offense, which was charged as a felony but was convertible to a misdemeanor upon entry of a judgment imposing a punishment other than imprisonment in state prison or upon declaration by the court, did not convert to a misdemeanor because, although the defendant received probation, the judgment did not note this fact and the court never declared the offense a misdemeanor.¹⁵²

B. Categorical Approach

In reentry cases, courts must often decide (1) whether a prior conviction is a felony or an “aggravated felony” for purposes of the statutory enhancements and (2) whether it qualifies for particular §2L1.2 enhancement(s). In general, these tasks are guided by the Supreme Court’s opinions in *Taylor v. United States*¹⁵³ and Shepard v. United States,¹⁵⁴ which set forth a “categorical approach” to deciding whether a prior conviction fits within a certain category of crimes.

Taylor holds that, when deciding whether a prior conviction falls within a certain class of crimes, a sentencing court may “look only to the fact of conviction and the statutory definition of the prior offense.”¹⁵⁵ A court is not concerned with the “facts underlying the prior convictions;” in other words, the court may not focus on the underlying criminal conduct itself.¹⁵⁶

This categorical approach “may permit the sentencing court to go beyond the mere fact of conviction in a narrow range of cases where a jury was actually required to find all the elements of generic burglary.”¹⁵⁷

For example, in a State whose burglary statutes include entry of an automobile as well as a building, if the indictment or information and jury instructions show that the defendant was charged only with a burglary of a building, and that the jury necessarily had to find an entry of a building to convict, then the Government should be allowed to use the conviction for enhancement.¹⁵⁸

Thus, a prior conviction qualifies for an enhancement “if either its statutory definition substantially corresponds to [the definition of the crime], or the charging paper and jury instructions actually required the jury to find all the elements of [the specified crime] in order to convict the defendant.”¹⁵⁹

¹⁵² Hernandez-Castillo, 449 F.3d at 1131 (holding that conviction for unlawful sexual intercourse with a minor more than 3 years younger, in violation of Cal. Pen. Code § 261.5(c), was a felony).

Shepard applied Taylor to a case in which the prior conviction was the result of a guilty plea. In such a case, the court’s review is “limited to the terms of the charging document, the terms of the plea agreement or transcript of colloquy between judge and defendant in which the factual basis for the plea was confirmed by the defendant, or to some comparable judicial record of this information.”¹⁶⁰

Although Taylor and Shepard dealt with statutory enhancements at 18 U.S.C. § 924(e), lower courts have applied their categorical approach in other contexts where a sentencing enhancement is based on a prior conviction, including §2L1.2.¹⁶¹ Under this approach, a court begins by looking only at the fact of conviction and determining whether the elements of the crime fit within the enumerated categories. Courts must define the scope of the category before they can undertake this categorical analysis and will do this by looking at the “ordinary, contemporary, and common meaning” of the category.¹⁶²

C. Modified Categorical Approach

In cases where a statute of conviction covers conduct that fits within the category and conduct that does not, the Supreme Court has authorized courts to look at the judicial record to determine whether the prior conviction was based on conduct that fit within the category at issue. This analysis is called the “modified categorical approach.”¹⁶³ For example, the Ninth Circuit considers “whether the ‘full range of conduct encompassed’ or ‘prohibited’” by the underlying statute fits within the definition of the category at issue.¹⁶⁴ “If the statute reaches both conduct that would constitute a crime of violence and conduct that would not, we turn to a modified categorical approach, which allows us to examine documentation or judicially noticeable facts that clearly establish that the defendant’s actual offense qualifies as a crime of violence.”¹⁶⁵

Under this limited review, the court may consider only those sources approved by Shepard.¹⁶⁶ These sources include the charging document, jury instructions, any plea statement or admissions, or “some comparable judicial record of this information.”¹⁶⁷ The Fifth Circuit has extended this list to include New York Certificates of Disposition¹⁶⁸ and the Ninth Circuit has included California Minute Entries.¹⁶⁹ On the other hand, courts typically may not rely on the description in a federal PSR,¹⁷⁰ California abstracts,¹⁷¹ or police reports.¹⁷²

For some of these documents, the result depends on how the document will be used. Courts cannot look at allegations in a charging document that were not established at trial or acknowledged in a guilty plea.¹⁷³ On the other hand, the Fifth Circuit has allowed use of a police record from a state that allows “a complaint written by a police officer [to] be the charging document,”¹⁷⁴ and the Ninth Circuit has authorized courts to look at police records “to determine that [a] prior conviction was for selling marijuana” because the defendant had “stipulated during the plea colloquy that the police reports contained a factual basis for his guilty plea.”¹⁷⁵ Similarly, while abstracts cannot be used to determine the nature of a prior conviction under the modified categorical approach, they may be used to establish the fact of conviction or the length of a prior sentence.¹⁷⁶

A court may not look at the underlying facts of the conviction simply because they may supply some fact that is necessary to fit within the category but is not required by the statutory definition. A court may look to the underlying facts as established by Shepard-approved documents only “if the statute of conviction contains a series of disjunctive elements.”¹⁷⁷ In the absence of supporting documents that limit the scope of a conviction under an overbroad statute, the enhancement does not apply.¹⁷⁸ “[T]he list in Shepard is designed to illuminate documents that identify what crime the defendant committed. . . . [W]hat matters is the fact of conviction, rather than the facts behind the conviction.”¹⁷⁹

D. Common Sense Approach

The Fifth Circuit uses a “common sense approach” in connection with the categorical approach.¹⁸⁰ The Fifth Circuit uses the common sense approach “[w]hen determining whether a state conviction constitutes a specifically enumerated, but undefined, offense for purposes of §2L1.2’s crime-of-violence enhancement.”¹⁸¹ Under the common sense approach, the court takes an undefined guideline term and articulates the “ordinary, contemporary, [and] common” meaning of that term.¹⁸² The “primary source for the generic contemporary meaning of [a category of offenses] is the Model Penal Code,”¹⁸³ as well as “treatise[s], modern state cases, and dictionaries.”¹⁸⁴

Once the scope of the category is defined, the court looks at the statute of conviction to see if it meets the common-sense definition. “State-law labels do not control this inquiry because the [crime of violence] adjustment incorporates crimes with certain elements, not crimes that happen to have the same label under state law.”¹⁸⁵ If the statute is broader than the definition, then the court looks at the sources approved by Shepard to decide whether the prior conviction falls within the categorical definition.¹⁸⁶ In this way, it appears the Fifth Circuit’s “common sense approach” is used in tandem with the “categorical approach.”¹⁸⁷

¹⁸⁶ See, e.g., Torres-Diaz, 438 F.3d at 534 (citing Shepard to support the conclusion that “whenever a statute provides a list of alternative methods of commission . . . we may look to charging papers to see which of the various statutory alternatives are involved in the particular case”).

¹⁸⁷ See, e.g., U.S. v. Montenegro-Recinos, 424 F.3d 715 (8th Cir. 2005) (“Because the guidelines do not define ‘sexual abuse of a minor,’ we give the term its ordinary, contemporary, common meaning, and we employ a categorical approach to determine whether [the prior] crime is a crime of violence under the guidelines.”).

The Fifth Circuit summarized its approach in this way:

To determine whether a prior conviction qualifies as a crime of violence as an enumerated offense, this court employs what we have called a common sense approach. . . . [The common sense approach asks whether a prior conviction is] equivalent to the enumerated offense . . . as that term is understood in its ordinary, contemporary, and common meaning. If the statute of conviction encompasses prohibited behavior that is not within the plain, ordinary meaning of the enumerated offense, the conviction is not a crime of violence as a matter of law. To distill the ordinary, contemporary, and common meaning of an enumerated offense, this court looks to sources such as the Model Penal Code, Professor LaFave’s treatise, and legal dictionaries. In comparing the definitions provided by these sources to the statute of conviction, the statute of conviction need not correlate precisely with the generic definition.¹⁸⁸

Under the common sense approach, it may not matter that some conduct covered by the statute does not fit within the category: “Even if the fit between the enumerated offense of aggravated assault and the ordinary, contemporary, and common meaning of aggravated assault may not be precise in each and every way, slight imprecision would not preclude our finding a sufficient equivalence.”¹⁸⁹

No other circuit court follows the Fifth Circuit’s common sense approach, except to the extent that certain courts exhort the use of “common sense” as a general matter in determining whether a conviction fits within a category of crimes¹⁹⁰ and, in fact, the Ninth Circuit has expressly foreclosed resort to the Fifth Circuit’s common sense approach.¹⁹¹

IV. Drug Trafficking Offense - §2L1.2(b)(1)(A)(i)

A. What convictions constitute a “drug trafficking offense”?

Guideline §2L1.2 defines a drug trafficking offense as “any offense under federal, state, or local law that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, dispensing, or offer to sell of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute, or dispense.”¹⁹² The interplay between this definition and various statutes can be seen in Table 2 in the Appendix, but a few highlights are worth noting:

1. All conduct under the statute of conviction must be a drug trafficking offense.

To qualify for enhancement under the “categorical approach” as a “drug-trafficking” conviction, all of the conduct covered by the statute of conviction must fit within this definition of drug trafficking. If some of the conduct does not, the conviction does not qualify for an enhancement.¹⁹³ For statutes that include trafficking and non-trafficking offenses (such as selling and transporting), if Shepard-approved documents establish that the conviction was based on conduct that meets the definition, then an enhancement may be appropriate;¹⁹⁴ if the documents are ambiguous or silent, no drug-trafficking enhancement applies.

2. Simple possession of a “trafficking quantity” of drugs is not a drug trafficking offense but may warrant a sentence increase.

In general, a conviction for simple possession of a controlled substance is not a drug trafficking offense, even where the prior conviction was based on a “trafficking quantity.”¹⁹⁵ The ¹⁹² USSG §2L1.2, comment. (n.1(b)(iv)).

¹⁹⁵ See, e.g., U.S. v. Villa-Lara, 451 F.3d 963 (9th Cir. 2006) (conviction for possession of a controlled substance in violation of Nev. Rev. Stat. § 453.3385 was not a drug trafficking offense); U.S. v. Herrera-Roldan, 414 F.3d 1238 (10th Cir. 2005) (holding that conviction for possession of a controlled substance in violation of Tex. Health & Safety Code § 481.121 was not a drug trafficking offense).

Eleventh Circuit has held that when a statutory scheme designates “possession of a significant designated quantity of drugs” as a drug trafficking offense, that designation implies the intent needed to qualify as a drug trafficking offense.¹⁹⁶ Rather than treating possession of trafficking quantities as trafficking offenses, the Fifth Circuit has affirmed sentences above the guideline range where the defendant possessed a trafficking quantity of drugs.¹⁹⁷ In 2008, the Commission adopted an upward departure provision for simple possession convictions in which the defendant possessed a large quantity of drugs.¹⁹⁸

B. How long was the sentence?

For felony drug trafficking offenses, it is also necessary to determine the length of the “sentence imposed.” For convictions that received a sentence greater than 13 months, a 16-level enhancement applies.¹⁹⁹ A 12-level enhancement applies to felony convictions that received a sentence of 13 months or less.²⁰⁰

The rules for this determination are currently similar to the rules for calculating sentence length under Chapter 4.²⁰¹ Consistent with Chapter 4, the sentence length is “based on the sentence pronounced, not the length of time actually served.”²⁰² It does not include any portion that was suspended,²⁰³ but it does include “any term of imprisonment given upon revocation of probation, parole, or supervised release.”²⁰⁴ Where a court imposed an indeterminate sentence, Madera-Madera*, 333 F.3d 1228 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding that conviction for simple possession of more than 28 grams of methamphetamine in violation of Georgia Code § 16-13-31(e) was a drug trafficking offense); see also U.S. v. Gutierrez-Bautista, 507 F.3d 305 (5th Cir. 2007) (same).

¹⁹⁷ See, e.g., U.S. v. Herrera-Garduno, 519 F.3d 526, 530-31 (5th Cir. 2008) (holding that above-guideline sentence was reasonable where prior conviction for possession with intent to deliver did not qualify as a drug trafficking offense but the facts of the case “indicated that [defendant] was in fact trafficking heroin”); U.S. v. Lopez-Salas, 513 F.3d 174 (5th Cir. 2008) (recognizing that upward variance may be appropriate where conviction for simple possession of large quantity of drugs did not qualify as a drug trafficking offense).

¹⁹⁹ USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(A)(i).

²⁰⁰ USSG §2L1.2(b)(1)(B).

²⁰¹ As noted above, when determining whether a prior conviction is a felony, the court focuses on the maximum term of imprisonment that could be imposed. When determining sentence length of an aggravated felony under 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43), the court includes time that was suspended. 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(48)(B). In one case, the Fourth Circuit recognized that §2L1.2 does not calculate sentence lengths in the same manner as Chapter 4 but nevertheless affirmed a district court’s decision to rely on §4A1.2(a)(2) to aggregate three separate sentences committed on the same day and arising out of the same events. U.S. v. Martinez-Varela, 531 F.3d 298 (4th Cir. 2008).

²⁰² USSG §4A1.2, comment. (n.2) (adopted by §2L1.2, comment. (n.1(B)(7))). If the stated sentence was for “time served,” then the sentence length is the length of time actually served. U.S. v. D’Oliveira, 402 F.3d 130 (2d Cir. 2005).

²⁰³ USSG §4A1.2(b)(2) (adopted by §2L1.2, comment. (n.1(B)(7))).

²⁰⁴ USSG §2L1.2, comment. (n.1(B)(vii)); see also U.S. v. Moreno-Cisneros, 319 F.3d 456, 457 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that “the length of the ‘sentence imposed’ for a prior state conviction includes the prison sentence the defendant received after his probation was revoked”); U.S. v. Ruiz-Gea, 340 F.3d 1181 (10th Cir. 2003) (holding that “sentence imposed” was greater than 13 months, despite original sentence of 90 days jail and probation, where

however, the sentence imposed is the stated maximum rather than the time actually served on the indeterminate sentence.²⁰⁵

A “sentence imposed” under §2L1.2 has the same meaning as a “sentence of imprisonment” under Chapter 4.²⁰⁶ Chapter 4 states that “[t]o qualify as a sentence of imprisonment, the defendant must have actually served a period of imprisonment on such sentence.”²⁰⁷ Thus, a sentence that did not result in any term of imprisonment is not a “sentence imposed” under §2L1.2.²⁰⁸ Therefore, a prior conviction that received a sentence of probation or a noncustodial fine does not qualify for either a 12- or 16-level increase because each of these enhancements requires a “sentence [be] imposed.”²⁰⁹

Because suspended time does not count towards the “sentence imposed” under §2L1.2, courts have occasionally considered what constitutes a suspension. “The defining characteristic of a ‘suspended sentence’ under the United States Sentencing Guidelines is that it is suspended by a judicial officer, rather than an executive agency.”²¹⁰ Courts have held that a reduction based on parole or some other executive reduction of sentence (such as good time) does not constitute a suspension.²¹¹ Likewise, deportation prior to expiration of a defendant’s sentence does not probation violation resulted in 1–15 year sentence); U.S. v. Compian-Torres, 320 F.3d 514 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that the length of the “sentence imposed” included sentence imposed on revocation of probation).

The quoted guideline language and its analysis in Alvarez-Hernandez is based on a 2003 amendment to §2L1.2. USSG App. C, Amend. 658. This analysis is different than the earlier, pre-amendment analysis that treated a noncustodial sentence as a sentence less than 13 months. See, e.g., U.S. v. Mendez-Villa, 346 F.3d 568, 570 (5th Cir. 2003) (per curiam) (holding that “the plain language of the Guidelines and the authoritative commentary indicate that any portion of the sentence spent on parole shall be included in the calculation of the ‘sentence imposed’ per U.S.S.G. §2L1.2(b)(1)”); *U.S. v. constitute a suspension, even when the sentencing court authorized immediate deportation.²¹² However, a judicial order reducing a sentence can change the length of the “sentence imposed.”²¹³

The Ninth Circuit held that while a sentence imposed on a probation violation was properly considered in calculating sentence length, where the statutory scheme and record suggested that the total time could not have exceeded 365 days, the sentence was necessarily less than the 13-month threshold above which a 16-level enhancement otherwise applies.²¹⁴ The court noted that “the government has the burden to establish clearly and unequivocally the conviction was based on all of the elements of a qualifying predicate offense,” including the length of the sentence.²¹⁵

V. Crime of Violence

Another basis for enhancement under §2L1.2 is a prior conviction for a “crime of violence” under subsection (b)(1)(A)(ii). This term, defined in Application Note 1(B)(iii), includes several enumerated offenses: “murder, manslaughter, kidnapping, aggravated assault, forcible sex offenses (including where consent to the conduct is not given or is not legally valid, such as where consent to the conduct is involuntary, incompetent, or coerced),²¹⁶ statutory rape, sexual abuse of a minor, robbery, arson, extortion, extortionate extension of credit, [and] burglary of a dwelling.”²¹⁷ The term also applies to “any other offense under federal, state, or local law that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another.”²¹⁸

Note: §2L1.2’s definition of “crime of violence” differs from—and is less expansive than—§4B1.2’s “crime of violence” definition. The §4B1.2 “crime of violence” definition includes those offenses which “otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another.”²¹⁹ But the §2L1.2 definition lacks this (“residual”) clause.

²¹² See U.S. v. Chavez-Diaz, 444 F.3d 1223, 1226 (10th Cir. 2006) (holding that authorization to deport defendant prior to expiration of sentence did not act to suspend 4-6 year sentence below 13 months, despite the following language: “if deemed appropriate by the Department of Immigration and Naturalization Services, the Defendant shall be immediately deported and returned to Mexico”).

²¹³ See U.S. v. Landeros-Arreola, 260 F.3d 407 (5th Cir. 2001) (holding that a judicial order changing a 4-year sentence to a sentence of probation was not merely a suspension but a reduction, so the conviction, though a crime of violence, was not an aggravated felony because the sentence was less than one year).

²¹⁹ USSG §4B1.2(a)(2).

A. General Principles

1. To be a § 2L1.2 crime of violence, the prior conviction must either fit in one of the enumerated categories or have as one of its elements the use of force.

Courts have held that a conviction need not fit within both groups in order to qualify for an enhancement.²²⁰ In general, the inquiry for the first set of crimes is simply whether the offense of conviction can properly be classified as one of the enumerated offenses. For the second group, the court must look at the specific elements of the offense and determine whether one of those establishes “the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another.”²²¹

2. A crime of violence need not be an aggravated felony to receive a 16-level enhancement.

Both §2L1.2 and 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) (aggravated felony definition) use the term “crime of violence,” but they define the term in different ways, often resulting in a situation where a conviction is a crime of violence under one definition but not the other. Under the guidelines, to be a crime of violence, a conviction must (1) be punishable by imprisonment of greater than one year, and (2) fit within one of the categories discussed in Application Note 1(B)(iii). Under the statute, a conviction must (1) fit within the statutory definition of “crime of violence” at 18 U.S.C. § 16; and (2) have received a term of imprisonment of at least one year.²²²

Because of these definitional differences, a conviction could trigger the 16-level

²²⁰ See, e.g., U.S. v. Rayo-Valdez, 302 F.3d 314 (5th Cir. 2002); U.S. v. Vargas-Garnica, 332 F.3d 471 (7th Cir. 2003); U.S. v. Gomez-Hernandez, 300 F.3d 974 (8th Cir. 2002); U.S. v. Pereira-Salmeron, 337 F.3d 1148 (9th Cir. 2003); U.S. v. Bonilla-Montenegro, 331 F.3d 1047 (9th Cir. 2003); U.S. v. Munguia-Sanchez, 365 F.3d 877 (10th Cir. 2004); U.S. v. Wilson, 392 F.3d 1243 (11th Cir. 2004).

²²¹ USSG §2L1.2, comment. (n.1(b)(iii)); see also, e.g., U.S. v. Grajeda, 581 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir. 2006) (California offense of assault with a deadly weapon or other non-firearm instrument or by any means of force likely to produce great bodily injury is a crime of violence, because the deadly weapon or means of force elements of the offense were sufficient to bring it within crime of violence definition), cert. denied 131 S.Ct. 583 (2010); U.S. v. Rivera-Ramos, 578 F.3d 1111 (9th Cir. 2009) (New York attempted robbery conviction is a crime of violence because New York’s definition of attempt, requiring conduct that comes within “a dangerous proximity to the criminal end to be obtained” is no broader than the definition at common law); U.S. v. Saavedra-Velazquez, 578 F.3d 1103 (9th Cir. 2009) (California attempted burglary conviction is a crime of violence, even though California definition of attempt only requires “slight acts in furtherance” of the crime), cert. denied, 130 S.Ct. 1547 (2010).

²²² The statutory term in § 16 is similar to the “use of force” provision under the guideline, but this too differs in important ways. First, the guideline requires that force be used against the person of another, whereas the statute can be satisfied by the use of force “against the person or property of another.” 18 U.S.C. § 16(a) (emphasis added). Second, the statute includes offenses that “involve[] a substantial risk [in contrast to the actual or threatened use] that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense.” 18 U.S.C. § 16(b) (emphasis added).

enhancement without being an aggravated felony.²²³ For example, a felony crime of violence where the sentence imposed was less than a year is not an aggravated felony but will qualify for the 16-level enhancement.²²⁴ A 2008 guideline amendment provides that in such circumstances, a downward departure may be warranted.²²⁵

B. Enumerated Offenses

This section identifies several specific issues that have been raised in deciding how to apply the enumerated categories. Table 3 in the Appendix shows how the enumerated offenses have been applied to specific state statutes.

1. Aggravated Assault

Statutory labels do not ultimately control the inquiry of whether a crime fits within a certain category for guideline purposes. (Said another way, a statute’s title does not end the inquiry but rather begins it.) On the one hand, the fact that a statute of conviction is not labeled “aggravated assault” does not exclude it from this category where the statutory elements fit the common definition of that term, such as where the elements require proof that a dangerous weapon was used.²²⁶ On the other hand, the fact that a crime is labeled an “aggravated assault” does not necessarily bring it within the scope of this definition where the aggravating factor is the status of the victim.²²⁷

2. Forcible Sex Offense

As discussed above under the categorical approach, “if the [statute at issue] prohibits some conduct that is not a forcible sex offense, then [a conviction under that statute] is not a crime of violence.”²²⁸ Consequently, courts have had to consider whether individual subsections of state criminal statutes allow convictions for conduct that is not a “forcible sex offense.” In ²²³ See, e.g., U.S. v. Pimentel-Flores, 339 F.3d 959 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that a conviction need not be an aggravated felony in order to qualify for a 16-level enhancement); U.S. v. Gonzalez, 550 F.3d 1319 (11th Cir. 2008).

²²⁴ U.S. v. Gonzalez-Coronado, 419 F.3d 1090 (10th Cir. 2005) (holding that felony conviction for attempted aggravated assault that received a sentence of probation was not an aggravated felony but was a “crime of violence” under §2L1.2).

²²⁵ USSG §2L1.2, comment. (n.7).

²²⁶ See, e.g., U.S. v. Sanchez-Ruedas, 452 F.3d 409 (5th Cir. 2006) (holding that conviction for assault with a deadly weapon in violation of Cal. Pen. Code § 245(a)(1) was aggravated assault under §2L1.2); U.S. v. Torres-Diaz, 438 F.3d 529 (5th Cir. 2006) (holding that conviction for second degree assault in violation of Conn. Gen. Stat. § 53a-60(a)(2) was aggravated assault under §2L1.2).

²²⁷ U.S. v. Fierro-Reyna, 466 F.3d 324 (5th Cir. 2006) (holding that Texas conviction for aggravated assault on a peace officer in violation of Tex. Pen. Code § 22.02(a)(2) was not aggravated assault under §2L1.2 because status of the victim was recognized as an aggravating factor in only a minority of jurisdictions); U.S. v. Esparza-Herrera, 557 F.3d 1019 (9th Cir. 2009) (holding that Arizona conviction for aggravated assault was not an aggravated felony because the Arizona statute was broader than the generic definition of aggravated assault, encompassing “garden-variety” reckless conduct).

²²⁸ U.S. v. Gomez-Gomez, 547 F.3d 242, 244–45 (5th Cir. 2008).

2008, the Commission amended the definition of “forcible sex offense”²²⁹ to include convictions “where consent to the conduct is not given or is not legally valid, such as where consent to the conduct is involuntary, incompetent, or coerced.”²³⁰

3. Sexual Abuse of a Minor

Because the guidelines do not define this term, courts have had to decide which individuals are “minors” and define what conduct constitutes “sexual abuse.” As to the first issue, the Fifth Circuit has held that because most states focus on individuals sixteen or younger, a statute criminalizing sexual contact with anyone under eighteen years of age does not constitute a conviction for sexual abuse of a minor.²³¹

As to the second issue, the Eleventh Circuit has defined sexual abuse of a minor as “a perpetrator’s physical or nonphysical misuse or maltreatment of a minor for a purpose associated with sexual gratification.”²³² The circuit courts’ efforts to define the scope of this category exemplify how different applications of the categorical result can lead to divergent results.

In United States v. Izaguirre-Flores,²³³ the Fifth Circuit held that a conviction for Taking Indecent Liberties with a Child in violation of N.C. Gen. Stat. § 14-202.1(a)(1) “constitutes ‘sexual abuse of a minor’ as that term is understood in its ‘ordinary, contemporary, [and] common’ meaning.”²³⁴ The court then considered how contemporary legal sources defined the various terms at issue, concluding that “[g]ratifying or arousing one’s sexual desires in the actual or constructive presence of a child is sexual abuse of a minor” as was “[t]aking indecent liberties with a child to gratify one’s sexual desire.”²³⁵ The court specifically rejected the defendant’s claim that the statute covered acts that would not be “sexual abuse of a minor,” reasoning that his examples of such conduct were too broad and would produce absurd results.²³⁶

In United States v. Baza-Martinez,²³⁷ the Ninth Circuit reached a contrary result on the ground that the North Carolina statute covered circumstances that would not involve harm to the child. Like the Fifth Circuit, the Ninth Circuit consulted “the dictionary definition” of the relevant terms.²³⁸ For the Ninth Circuit, the question turned on the meaning of “abuse,” which it defined as “physical or psychological harm.”²³⁹ The Ninth Circuit concluded that § 14-202.1 was not categorically a crime of violence because it prohibited conduct that was not necessarily “either physically or psychologically harmful to the minor.”²⁴⁰ The difference, according to the Ninth Circuit, was that the statute at issue focused on “the perpetrator’s mens rea” rather than the harm caused to the child.²⁴¹ The court noted that under North Carolina caselaw, a conviction under this statute could be sustained where the defendant “secretly set up a video camera in an office and asked a minor to undress for the purpose of filming her without her knowledge,” and she did not learn of the video until after she was 21.²⁴² Because this scenario caused no harm to a minor, the Ninth Circuit concluded that the statute was not categorically “sexual abuse of a minor.”²⁴³

The difference between these holdings may lie in the perceived likelihood that non-abusive conduct would be prosecuted under the statute. In the Fifth Circuit case, the defendant’s hypotheticals “read[] too broadly the statutory language” and led to “absurd results,”²⁴⁴ so the court was unwilling to hold that the statute covered non-abusive conduct. In contrast, the Ninth Circuit had before it a decision from a state appellate court that affirmed a conviction under the statute in what it determined was a non-abusive situation. These cases underscore the importance of precisely defining the scope of both the guideline categories and the statutes of conviction. If the conduct covered by the statute does not fall completely within the guideline category, then the enhancement does not apply.

4. Burglary of a Dwelling

This enhancement does not apply if the underlying burglary statute does not require proof of intent to commit a crime at the time of entry²⁴⁵ or of unprivileged or unlawful entry.²⁴⁶ It also does not apply if the statute of conviction does not require proof that the building was a dwelling or home.²⁴⁷ The Fifth Circuit has held that a burglary statute does not qualify as burglary of a dwelling if it can be established by mere entry of a dwelling’s “curtilage,” which is “the grounds around the dwelling and is not the dwelling itself.”²⁴⁸

C. “Use of Force”

In addition to these enumerated categories, the enhancement for a crime of violence applies to “any other offense under federal, state, or local law that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another.”²⁴⁹ Table 4 in the Appendix illustrates how this category has been applied to certain convictions.

1. The manner of committing the crime is irrelevant—only the elements matter.

Under this provision, it does not matter whether the defendant’s manner of violating the offense used force. The primary consideration is whether the statutory elements entail the use of force. “The elements of an offense of course come from the statute of conviction, not from the particular manner and means that attend a given violation of the statute. . . . [T]he statute of conviction, not the defendant’s underlying conduct, is the proper focus.”²⁵⁰ In short, for a non-enumerated offense to qualify, the fact of physical force must be a fact that is necessary for the prosecution to secure a conviction.²⁵¹

Thus, the modified categorical approach does “not permit [the court] to examine judicial records to determine whether [the defendant] in fact used physical force when violating [the statute at issue].”²⁵² This is because “what [the defendant] actually did is irrelevant to whether the statute has [a particular] element. The elements are the elements, and they can be determined only by reading and interpreting the statute itself.”²⁵³

²⁴⁸ Compare U.S. v. Gomez-Guerra, 485 F.3d 301 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding that Florida burglary statute did not constitute burglary of a dwelling), with U.S. v. Castillo-Morales, 507 F.3d 873 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding that same statute constituted burglary of a dwelling after looking at judicial record).

²⁵¹ See, e.g., U.S. v. Gamez, 577 F.3d 394 (2d Cir. 2009) (finding that conviction for criminal possession of a weapon in the second degree under New York law, which requires that a defendant intend to use a gun unlawfully against another, was not crime of violence because it did not include as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force, even though the defendant had, in fact, used the gun to shoot two people); U.S. v. Vargas-Duran, 356 F.3d 598 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that crime of intoxication assault does not involve use of force because intentional use of force against another person is not necessary component of the offense).

²⁵² U.S. v. Zuniga-Soto, 527 F.3d 1110, 1119 (10th Cir. 2008). This holding repudiates an older line of cases in the Tenth Circuit that seemed to allow courts to look at the judicial record of the prior conviction to determine whether a prior conviction actually entailed the use of force. Id. at 1121 (citing cases).

2. The fact that the conduct resulted in harm does not establish the use of force.

A related principle is that harm to a victim does not establish the use of force, so that a statute that focuses on the resultant harm rather than the defendant's conduct may not qualify for an enhancement. For example, the Fifth Circuit held that a conviction for family violence battery was not a crime of violence because it was “results-oriented and does not contain a requirement that the offender apply force, but rather, leaves open the possibility that harm to the victim might result from omission or from the actions of another person or animal controlled by the offender.”²⁵⁴ Furthermore, the Tenth Circuit has noted that a defendant may cause injury without applying physical force, such as “an injury caused not by physical force, but by guile, deception, or deliberate omission.”²⁵⁵ Specifically, the Tenth Circuit has held that drugging a victim is not a crime of violence under §2L1.2, despite the forceful impact it has on the victim, because its elements (administering drugs) do not require the use of physical force—“the adjective physical must refer to the mechanism by which the force is imparted to the ‘person of another.’”²⁵⁶

3. Circuits are split as to the mens rea required for enhancement under this provision.

To qualify as a crime of violence under this provision, several courts have considered whether the term “use” requires proof of intent. In Leocal v. Ashcroft,²⁵⁷ the Supreme Court interpreted similar language in 18 U.S.C. § 16 to mean that a DUI statute without a mens rea element could not be a “crime of violence” because the word “use” “naturally suggests a higher degree of intent than negligent or merely accidental conduct.”²⁵⁸ Courts have relied on Leocal to hold that the “use of force” provision in the crime of violence definition requires a mens rea greater than recklessness or negligence.²⁵⁹ Several of these cases have arisen in the context of vehicular homicide and drunken driving cases, and their outcomes are set forth in Table 4.

4. Force must be used against a person.

In contrast to the statutory definition of crime of violence at 18 U.S.C. § 16, the guideline definition does not include the use of force against another's property. This point is illustrated by shooting cases. In a number of recent cases, courts have held that a conviction for shooting at a building did not qualify for a 16-level enhancement because the statute of conviction did not require proof that the building was occupied.²⁶⁰ Thus, although the use of force was established by the shooting, the conviction did not establish that this force was directed at a person.

VI. Aggravated Felonies

For convictions that do not trigger a 16 or 12-level enhancement, an 8-level “aggravated felony” enhancement may apply. As used in §2L1.2, the term is defined at 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43).²⁶¹ To decide whether a prior conviction is an aggravated felony, a court must determine if it is an offense that is included in the list of crimes found at section 1101(a)(43). Some of these crimes are listed by specific federal statute, others by description. For those crimes that are described rather than identified by specific statute, the court follows the categorical approach discussed above to decide whether the prior conviction fits within that category. Note that the definition includes “an attempt or conspiracy to commit” any of the offenses included in the definition.²⁶² Summaries of relevant circuit court decisions are set forth in Table 5 in the Appendix.

As discussed earlier, an “aggravated felony” does not actually have to be a “felony:” it may apply to qualifying misdemeanor offenses. “Aggravated felony” is a term of art that “includes certain misdemeanants who receive a sentence of one year.”²⁶³ In contrast to the guideline definition of felony, which is based on an offense being punishable by imprisonment exceeding one year,²⁶⁴ this statute includes a number of convictions “for which the term of imprisonment [is] at least one year.”²⁶⁵

Under section 1101(a)(43), certain convictions require the court to focus on the term of imprisonment that “may be imposed” under the statute of conviction.²⁶⁶ For others, the focus is on the length of the “term of imprisonment” that was actually imposed.²⁶⁷ Under this definition, however, the method for determining sentence length differs from §2L1.2. In contrast to the guidelines, the “term of imprisonment” under section 1101 does not exclude time that was suspended.²⁶⁸ A sentence of probation, on the other hand, is not a suspended sentence and, thus, cannot be an aggravated felony under such a provision.²⁶⁹

“The aggravated felony 8-level enhancement is only applicable to “possession” conduct punishable as a felony under federal law.

In Lopez v. Gonzales,²⁷⁰ the Supreme Court held that “a state offense constitutes a ‘felony punishable under the Controlled Substances Act’ only if it proscribes conduct punishable as a felony under that federal law.”²⁷¹ Because simple possession is generally not punishable as a felony under the CSA, a state court felony conviction for simple possession is not an aggravated felony for federal sentencing purposes. Henceforth, under Lopez, simple possession conduct that is a felony under state law does not trigger the aggravated felony 8-level enhancement.²⁷²

Recidivist provisions in § 844(a) (“Possession” offenses) require actual previous state convictions to trigger the “aggravated felony” enhancement.

Section 844(a) (“Penalties for simple possession”) generally imposes a (maximum) misdemeanor one-year sentence. But upon a showing of a previous conviction under the federal drug statute or “a prior conviction for any drug, narcotic, or chemical offense chargeable under the law of any State has become final,” recidivist provisions increase the § 844(a) punishment ranges. And this fact had generated a circuit split of authority over whether such previous state “possession” convictions would qualify as an ‘aggravated felony’ because they “could have been” charged as a § 844 felony. The Supreme Court settled the matter in Carachuri-Rosendo v. Holder, when it held that “when a defendant has been convicted of a simple possession offense that has not been enhanced based on the fact of a prior conviction, he has not been ‘convicted’...of a ‘felony punishable’ as such ‘under the Controlled Substances Act [CSA].’”²⁷³ And, by definition, if the offense is not a “felony” under the CSA, it is not a felony under § 1101(a)(43)’s definition of ‘aggravated felony.’²⁷⁴

VII. Other Categories (+16)

The other categories of offenses listed in §2L1.2(b)(1)(A)²⁷⁵ are used less frequently. Most of these categories are defined by reference to specific federal statutes.²⁷⁶ For state convictions, the relevant inquiry under these enhancements is whether the elements described in the state statute “would have been an offense” under those statutes.²⁷⁷ There has been little appellate caselaw discussing these enhancements, but some of the cases that do are collected at Table 6 in the Appendix.

A. Firearms Offense

A firearms offense is one of several, specified federal statutes or any state offense whose elements satisfy the elements of the federal statute.²⁷⁸ A firearms offense may also be any state or federal offense that “prohibits the importation, distribution, transportation, or trafficking” of certain, specified firearms.²⁷⁹

B. Child Pornography Offense

A child pornography offense is one of several, specified federal statutes, or any state or local offense whose elements satisfy the elements of those federal statutes.²⁸⁰

C. National Security or Terrorism Offense

A terrorism offense is “any offense involving, or intending to promote, a ‘Federal crime of terrorism,’ as that term is defined in 18 U.S.C. § 2332b(g)(5).”²⁸¹

D. Human Trafficking Offense

Human trafficking offenses are convictions under specified federal statutes or under state laws whose elements satisfy any of those statutes.²⁸²

E. Alien Smuggling Offense

Alien smuggling offenses are only those that are specified as such in 8 U.S.C.

F. Inchoate Crimes

In addition to the crimes specifically listed in §2L1.2(b)(1), the application notes state that these convictions “include the offenses of aiding and abetting, conspiring, and attempting, to commit such offenses.”²⁸⁶ One issue that has arisen is whether solicitation to commit one of these offenses triggers an enhancement. The Tenth Circuit has held that solicitation to commit a crime of violence is a crime of violence, reasoning that it was analogous to the other provisions listed in the application note.²⁸⁷ In contrast, the Eleventh Circuit has held that soliciting the sale of drugs is not a drug trafficking offense because a conviction could include purchasing drugs for personal use.²⁸⁸

VIII. Criminal History

Under §2L1.2, a single prior conviction may increase a defendant’s sentence in three ways: (1) an enhancement under §2L1.2(b)(1); (2) criminal history points under §4A1.1(a), (b), or (c); and (3) status points under §4A1.1(d). Courts have consistently rejected the argument that considering a defendant’s prior convictions in calculating both offense level and criminal history is impermissible double counting.²⁸⁹ In some cases, courts have relied on §4A1.3 to increase a sentence based on underrepresented criminal history.²⁹⁰ In contrast, one court held that, to the extent that an upward departure was based on a prior, uncharged illegal entry, the sentencing court erred because there was nothing “unusual” about the illegal entry.²⁹¹

²⁹⁰ Figaro, 935 F.2d 4 (1st Cir. 1991) (affirming upward departure where criminal history did not include prior, uncharged act of alien smuggling); U.S. v. Zuniga-Peralta, 442 F.3d 345 (5th Cir. 2006) (affirming departure under USSG §4A1.3 from Category II to Category VI based on prior uncounted offenses, four deportations, and use of eleven aliases).

²⁹¹ Figaro, 935 F.2d at 7 (holding that upward departure could not properly be based on prior uncharged illegal entry but affirming on other grounds).

A related issue deals with the application of §4A1.1(d) to defendants who are “found” while serving a jail sentence on an unrelated state matter. Courts have held that illegal reentry is a continuing offense that “tracks the alien ‘wherever he goes,’” including into state custody following conviction for a crime committed after returning to the United States.²⁹² Thus, courts have held that an alien who is “found” by immigration officials while in state custody has committed the § 1326 offense “while under a sentence of imprisonment” and thus subject to a two-point increase under §4A1.1(d).²⁹³

Note also that the cross-designation program (the 287(g) program) may affect the “found in” date, and thus whether or not the defendant was “under a sentence of imprisonment” when he committed the § 1326 offense. Specifically, the Fourth Circuit has held that immigration authorities have actual knowledge of an immigrant’s presence in the United States when a law enforcement officer participating in the cross-designation program issues an immigration detainer.²⁹⁴ In Sosa-Carabantes, the Fourth Circuit concluded that, since the defendant had not yet been sentenced prior to issuance of the immigration detainer, the district court erroneously applied the two-point increase under §4A1.1(d).²⁹⁵

IX. Departures

Courts have discussed several grounds for imposing a sentence outside the guideline range established by §2L1.2.

A. Early Disposition Programs - §5K3.1: “Fast Track”

The most frequent reason for granting a departure to defendants sentenced pursuant to this guideline is USSG §5K3.1, which permits a reduction pursuant to an early disposition (commonly known as “fast track”) programs. Section 5K3.1 authorizes the court to depart downward up to 4 levels based on a government motion “pursuant to an early disposition program authorized by the Attorney General of the United States and the United States Attorney for the district in which the court resides.”

Because these programs have not been available in all districts, defendants have argued that the unavailability of fast track programs constitutes an unwarranted disparity. Although the circuit courts have uniformly rejected claims that the unavailability of fast track programs violates equal protection,²⁹⁶ the circuits have split over whether Kimbrough permits district courts to consider purported disparities created by the unavailability of such a program in some districts. The Fifth, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits have held that district courts may not consider disparities created by the unavailability of fast-track programs,²⁹⁷ while the First, Third, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth Circuits have concluded that a district court may consider these disparities.²⁹⁸ The Second Circuit has held that defendants in non-fast-track districts are not “similarly situated” to defendants in fact-track districts, and thus, “sentencing disparities resulting from the existence of fast-track districts are not per se unwarranted.”²⁹⁹

In 2012, the Department of Justice issued a policy memorandum for the purpose of establishing fast track programs in every district.³⁰⁰ Because fast track programs have not yet been established pursuant to the policy memorandum, it is unclear how this policy change will affect sentencing arguments predicated on the availability and administration of fast track programs.

B. Collateral Consequences

Another issue that confronts many reentry defendants is the collateral consequences of a reentry conviction. Because of their immigration status, undocumented aliens are ineligible for minimum security facilities and certain BOP programs, including the ability to finish their sentence in a halfway house. Courts generally have rejected these collateral consequences as grounds for a sentence reduction,³⁰¹ although one court has stated that “a downward departure based on collateral consequences of deportation is justified if the circumstances of the case are extraordinary.”³⁰²

The Guidelines Manual does not specifically address whether or how a sentencing court should consider a defendant-alien’s stipulation to an administrative or judicial order of removal. However, various circuits have considered whether the defendant’s stipulation to removal is a permissible ground for downward departure. These circuits have uniformly concluded, or have at least recognized the possibility, that a district court may grant a departure in some circumstances based on the defendant-alien’s stipulation to removal; no circuit has categorically barred a stipulation to removal as a basis for departure.³⁰³

In Clase-Espinal, the First Circuit held that a stipulation to deportation is insufficient as a matter of law to support a departure in the absence of a “colorable, nonfrivolous defense to deportation.”³⁰⁴ The Second, Third, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits have similarly held that a stipulation to removal is a permissible ground for departure, though only when the defendant had a “colorable, nonfrivolous” defense to removal.³⁰⁵

The Eighth Circuit has focused on whether the defendant surrendered procedural rights and protections in stipulating to the removal, rather than looking only to whether the defendant forfeited non-frivolous defenses to removal. In Jauregui, the defendant was a lawful permanent resident who was convicted of possession with intent to distribute methamphetamine.³⁰⁶ The defendant moved for, and received, a four-level departure for stipulating to removal.³⁰⁷ On the government’s appeal, the Eighth Circuit affirmed and explained that the defendant, “as a resident alien, gave up substantial rights in waiving the administrative deportation hearing, and it was within the sound discretion of the district court to conclude that in doing so he has substantially assisted in the administration of justice.”³⁰⁸ The Eighth Circuit did not specifically analyze or discuss whether the defendant might have succeeded in opposing removal.³⁰⁹

Although the circuits generally agree that the defendant-alien must sacrifice something by stipulating to removal before receiving a departure, they are split on whether the district court may grant a departure over the U.S. Attorney’s objection. The Third and Tenth Circuits have held that a district court may not depart based on a stipulation to removal unless the U.S. Attorney agrees to the departure.³¹⁰ This requirement flows from the “judiciary’s limited power with regard to deportation.”³¹¹ The Second and Ninth Circuits have reached the opposite conclusion.³¹² These courts have reasoned that requiring the government’s agreement would create a condition for departure not required by the Guidelines.

C. Motive and Cultural Assimilation

Courts have generally held that the defendant's motive for reentry is not a basis for a downward departure.³¹³ Courts have recognized, however, that the defendant's motivation to care for a family could mitigate his return, although such circumstances must generally be exceptional.³¹⁴ Notably, one court upheld a sentence increase where the reentry was committed to facilitate the commission of another offense.³¹⁵

The commentary to §2L1.2 provides that a departure based on the defendant's cultural assimilation may be appropriate, but only "where (A) the defendant formed cultural ties primarily to the United States from having continuously resided in the United States from childhood, (B) those cultural ties provided the primary motivation for the defendant's illegal reentry and continued presence in the United States, and (C) such a departure is not likely to increase the risk to the public from further crimes of the defendant."³¹⁶ In United States v. Lua-Guizar, the Seventh Circuit affirmed the district court's refusal to grant this departure, where the district court found that the defendant was likely to recidivate (i.e., that the departure would likely "increase the risk to the public from further crimes of the defendant") given his past cocaine use, the seriousness of his criminal history, and his commission of criminal offenses after illegally reentering the United States.³¹⁷ In United States v. Rodriguez, the Fifth Circuit affirmed the district court's refusal to depart based on cultural assimilation, concluding that "[a]lthough cultural assimilation can be a mitigating factor and form the basis of a downward departure, nothing requires that a sentencing court must accord it dispositive weight."³¹⁸

D. Seriousness of Prior Offense

Courts have sometimes considered whether the enhancement under the guidelines was ³¹⁴ See, e.g., U.S. v. Carrasco, 313 F.3d 750 (2d Cir. 2002) (finding that departure not warranted where defendant was separated from his wife; provision of financial support for three children was not exceptional circumstance); U.S. v. Abreu-Cabrera, 64 F.3d 67 (2d Cir. 1995) (stating that defendant's motivation to reenter to visit his family, absent extraordinary circumstances, may not justify downward departure); U.S. v. Montes-Pineda, 445 F.3d 375 (4th Cir. 2006) (finding that motivation to be reunited with family and fact that prior conviction was 14 years old, though relevant, did not require a nonguideline sentence); U.S. v. Sierra-Castillo, 405 F.3d 932 (10th Cir. 2005) (holding that departure based on family circumstances was not appropriate where defendant returned to care for his sick wife but did not show that he was the only person capable of caring for his wife); Saucedo-Patino, 358 F.3d at 794 (holding that defendant did not qualify for a departure under § 5H1.5 & 5H1.6 where none of the specific aspects of his employment history or family responsibilities were so exceptional as to take his case outside the heartland).

³¹⁵ U.S. v. Figaro, 935 F.2d 4 (1st Cir. 1991) (affirming upward departure where reentry was committed to facilitate the commission of alien smuggling).

appropriate given the nature of a prior conviction. Although some courts have held that the length of time between conviction and deportation was not a reason to depart,³¹⁹ at least two circuits since Booker have recognized that the age of a prior conviction is relevant to the length of sentence that should be imposed.³²⁰

Since Booker, however, courts have held that an upward departure or variance may be appropriate based on a conviction that did not “‘technically’ qualif[y]” for an enhancement under §2L1.2.³²¹ One case has suggested that a guideline sentence would be unreasonable based on the nature of the prior crime.³²² Another recent opinion reversed a below-guideline sentence, reasoning that the underlying facts were not so different from a typical case under that enhancement.³²³

Because an applicable offense level may substantially overstate or understate the seriousness of a previous conviction, an upward or downward departure may be warranted.³²⁴ And, effective November 1, 2011, and as part of a proposed amendment to §2L1.2 (setting out potentially limited enhancements under subsections (b)(1)(A) or (B)(1)(B),³²⁵ an upward departure may be warranted where any such limited enhancement does not adequately account for the seriousness or extent of the underlying previous conviction.³²⁶

³¹⁹ Stultz, 356 F.3d at 268 (holding that the fact that prior drug trafficking conviction was more than 16 years old did not justify a downward departure); Abreu-Cabrera, 64 F.3d at 76; U.S. v. Maul-Valverde, 10 F.3d 544 (8th Cir. 1993) (holding that downward departure could not be based on fact that prior conviction was more than 15 years old and thus would receive no criminal history points).

³²⁰ U.S. v. Montes-Pineda, 445 F.3d 375 (4th Cir. 2006) (holding that the fact that prior conviction was 14 years old, though relevant, did not require a nonguideline sentence); U.S. v. Amezcua-Vasquez, 567 F.3d 1050, 1055 (9th Cir. 2009) (finding that, under circumstances of the case, it was unreasonable to adhere to guidelines sentence including 16-level enhancement “because of the staleness of [the defendant’s] prior conviction and his subsequent history showing no convictions for harming others or committing other crimes listed in Section 2L1.2”).

³²¹ U.S. v. Herrera-Garduno, 519 F.3d 526, 530 (5th Cir. 2008) (holding that above-guideline sentence was reasonable where prior conviction for possession with intent to deliver did not qualify as “drug trafficking offense” but facts of case “indicated that [defendant] was in fact trafficking [drugs]”); U.S. v. Lopez-Salas, 513 F.3d 174, 181 (5th Cir. 2008) (recognizing upward variance may be appropriate where conviction for simple possession of large quantity of drugs did not qualify as drug trafficking offense); see also U.S. v. Tzep-Mejia, 461 F.3d 522 (5th Cir. 2006) (upholding 36 month sentence over guideline range of 10–16 months where prior conviction for attempted assault was not crime of violence but would have resulted in range of 46–57 months had enhancement applied).

³²² U.S. v. Hernandez-Castillo, 449 F.3d 1127 (10th Cir. 2006) (suggesting that 16-level enhancement based on consensual sexual relations between two teenagers was unreasonable).

³²³ U.S. v. Perez-Pena, 453 F.3d 236 (4th Cir. 2006) (24-month sentence unreasonable in light of 37-45 month guideline range where prior conviction was essentially for statutory rape).

³²⁵ Under the proposed amendment which takes effect November 1, 2011, absent contrary congressional action, convictions can be enhanced under subsections (b)(1)(A) and (B) with the respective 16- and 12-level enhancements if they receive criminal history points under Chapter IV (Criminal History and Criminal Livelihood); if they do not, then respective 12- and 8-level enhancements will apply. See, supra, at pp. 16-17 and note 109.

IMMIGRATION FRAUD OR MISCONDUCT

This section of the Primer provides a general overview of the statutes, sentencing guidelines, and case law related to fraud or misconduct during the immigration process.

I. Statutory Scheme

The most common offenses in this category typically carry a 5-year maximum and are sentenced under §§2L2.1 or 2L2.2.

8 U.S.C. § 1160(b)(7)(A)	False Statements in Applications This statute prohibits knowingly and willfully making false statements in applications for adjustment of status.
8 U.S.C. § 1255a(c)(6)	False Statements in Applications This statute also prohibits knowingly and willfully making false statements in an application to adjust status.
8 U.S.C. § 1325(c)	Marriage Fraud This statute prohibits marrying a person for the purpose of evading immigration laws.
8 U.S.C. § 1325(d)	Immigration-Related Entrepreneurship Fraud This statute prohibits establishing a commercial enterprise for the purpose of evading any provision of the immigration laws.

II. Guideline Overview

Immigration fraud crimes can fall under two guidelines: §2L2.1 or §2L2.2.

A. Immigration Fraud - §2L2.1: Trafficking in a Document Relating to Naturalization, Citizenship, or Legal Resident Status, or a United States Passport; False Statement in Respect to the Citizenship or Immigration Status of Another; Fraudulent Marriage to Assist Alien to Evade Immigration Law

1. Base Offense Level: 11.³²⁷
2. Specific Offense Characteristics: As with smuggling offenses, a reduction applies where (1) “the offense was committed other than for profit” or ³²⁷ USSG §2L2.1(a).

involved only the defendant's family.³²⁸ The offense level is also increased based on (2) the number of documents, (3) reason to believe the documents would be used to facilitate a felony, (4) prior conviction for a felony immigration offense, and (5) fraudulent use of a passport.³²⁹

B. Immigration Fraud - §2L2.2: Fraudulently Acquiring Documents Relating to Naturalization, Citizenship, or Legal Resident Status for Own Use; False Personation or Fraudulent Marriage by Alien to Evade Immigration Law; Fraudulently Acquiring or Improperly Using a United States Passport

1. Base Offense Level: 8.³³⁰
2. Specific Offense Characteristics: Enhancements apply if the defendant was (1) previously deported, (2) has a record of prior immigration offenses, or (3) fraudulently obtained or used a passport.³³¹
3. Cross reference: If the passport or visa was used in the commission of another felony (other than a violation of immigration laws), the guideline for attempt, solicitation, or conspiracy (§2X1.1) applies.³³² If death resulted, the homicide guidelines (§2A1.1–1.5) apply.³³³

C. Scope of coverage

A number of statutes are covered by both §2L2.1 and §2L2.2: 8 U.S.C. §§ 1160(b)(7)(A), 1185(a)(3), 1255(a)(c)(6), 1325(b), 1325(c), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1015(a)-(e), 1028, 1425, 1426, 1542, 1543, 1544, 1546.

Other crimes are covered only by §2L2.1: 8 U.S.C. § 1185(a)(4), 8 U.S.C. § 1427, 1541.

Still other crimes are covered only by §2L2.2: 8 U.S.C. §§ 1185(a)(5), 1423, 1424.

Regarding convictions under 18 U.S.C. § 1028, which prohibits fraud in connection with identification documents, §§2L2.1 and 2L2.2 apply, rather than §2B1.1, when “the primary purpose of the offense . . . was to violate . . . the law pertaining to naturalization, citizenship, or legal resident status.”³³⁴ Courts have used this same reasoning to apply §2L2.1, instead of §2F1.1, to convictions for making a false statement under 18 U.S.C. § 1001 when the false statement is made in the immigration context.³³⁵

Notably, when “a defendant is convicted of the possession of a relatively minor number of false or fraudulent immigration documents,” a court will have to choose whether the conduct reflects trafficking under §2L2.1 or personal use under §2L2.2.³³⁶

III. Specific Guideline Application Issues

A. Lack of Profit Motive - §2L2.1(b)(1): If the offense was committed other than for profit, or the offense involved . . . only the defendant’s spouse or child . . . decrease by 3 levels.

One court refused this reduction where defendants’ employment included preparing false asylum applications, despite the fact that their compensation was not specifically tied to specific illegal acts.³³⁷ Courts have upheld a denial of this reduction where evidence suggested the defendant was selling documents.³³⁸

Conversely, one court held it was inappropriate to depart upward based on a profit motive “unless there was a finding that the profit involved in the offense of conviction was of such a magnitude that the three-step increase in the offense level already added did not properly reflect the offense level of the offense of conviction.”³³⁹

B. Number of Documents Involved - §2L2.1(b)(2): If the offense involved six or more documents or passports, increase by . . .

1. Number

The enhancement under this provision increases with the number of documents. The application notes explain that “[w]here it is established that multiple documents are part of a set ³³⁵ See, e.g., U.S. v. Kuku, 129 F.3d 1435, 1439 (11th Cir. 1997) (remanding conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 1001 for resentencing under §2L2.1 where “(1) the descriptive language of §2L2.1 more specifically characterizes [the defendant’s] offense conduct than does §2F1.1; (2) Comment 11 to §2F1.1 suggests that [the defendant’s] offense conduct is more aptly covered by §2L2.1; and (3) the loss-based method of sentence enhancement used by §2F1.1 does not suit the nature of [the defendant’s] offense conduct”).

³³⁶ See, e.g., U.S. v. Principe, 203 F.3d 849 (5th Cir. 2000) (remanding sentence imposed under §2L2.1 for resentencing under §2L2.2 where defendant possessed three identification cards with her picture under different names).

³³⁷ U.S. v. Torres, 81 F.3d 900 (9th Cir. 1996).

³³⁸ See, e.g., U.S. v. Buenrostro-Torres, 24 F.3d 1173 (9th Cir. 1994); U.S. v. White, 1 F.3d 13 (D.C. Cir. 1993).

³³⁹ U.S. v. Mendoza, 890 F.2d 176, 180 (9th Cir. 1989), withdrawn by 902 F.2d 15 (9th Cir. 1990).

of documents intended for use by a single person, treat the set as one document.”³⁴⁰ One court explained that documents will “constitute only one document even if used many times, by one individual, to perpetuate the same identity fraud.”³⁴¹ For example, a set might include “a counterfeit passport, phony green card, and forged work papers.”³⁴² In contrast, some documents are not a set, even though they will be used only one time by the same person.³⁴³

The application notes also provide that an upward departure may be warranted “[i]f the offense involved substantially more than 100 documents.”³⁴⁴

2. Documents

Another issue deals with the scope of the term “documents.” The guideline does not define “document,” but courts have relied on the definition in 18 U.S.C. § 1028(d), concluding that the term “documents” includes not only “those documents that relate to naturalization, citizenship, or legal resident status” but also any “identification document.”³⁴⁵

3. Involved

A final issue is whether certain documents were “involved” in the offense. One court reasoned that “‘involved’ does not mean ‘produced,’” nor does it “refer[] only to completed documents”; rather, it “refer[s] to items ‘draw[n] in,’ ‘implicated’ or ‘entangled.’”³⁴⁶

C. Use of Passport or Visa to Commit a Felony - §2L2.1(b)(2): If the defendant knew, believed, or had reason to believe that a passport or visa was to be used to facilitate the commission of a felony offense, other than an offense involving violation of the immigration laws, increase by 4 levels.

In deciding what are “immigration laws” for purposes of this section, the Eleventh Circuit

Torres*, 81 F.3d 900 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that the number of separate documents is not the same as the number of “sets of documents” and remanding for resentencing where the government did not establish how many sets were contained in the many separate documents it discovered).

Salazar*, 70 F.3d 351 (5th Cir. 1995) (affirming enhancement based on hundreds of blank I-94 cards where defendant intended to use these to manufacture fake documents); Castellanos, 165 F.3d at 1131-32 (holding that guideline applies to blank documents).

cited the definition in 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(17) to conclude that fraudulently obtaining a Social Security Card in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 408(a)(6) was not a violation of immigration laws, therefore allowing application of the 4-level enhancement.³⁴⁷

D. Prior Deportation - §2L2.2(b)(1): If the defendant is an unlawful alien who has been deported (voluntarily or involuntarily) on one or more occasions prior to the instant offense, increase by 2 levels.

A defendant who voluntarily leaves the country while the appeal is pending qualifies for this enhancement.³⁴⁸

E. Departures and Variances

1. National Security

Section 2L2.2 specifically authorizes an upward departure “[i]f the defendant fraudulently obtained or used a United States passport for the purpose of entering the United States to engage in terrorist activity.”³⁴⁹

Without relying on this provision, two cases have increased sentences based on national security/terrorism concerns. In one case, the Eleventh Circuit affirmed a 28-month sentence for conspiracy to produce identification documents, despite a guideline range of 15–21 months under §2L2.1, where the offense was linked to “widespread corruption” within the Florida Department of Motor Vehicles that “impact[ed] national security.”³⁵⁰ In another case, the Second Circuit affirmed a 36-month sentence for possessing a counterfeit green card, despite a guideline range of 0–6 months under §2L2.2, where the defendant was involved in a bombing plot.³⁵¹

2. Facilitating Another Offense - §5K2.9

One court affirmed a 24-month sentence for making false statements on a passport application, based on an upward departure from base offense level 6 to 15 and from criminal history category I to II, where evidence established that the crime was committed to facilitate another offense for which the defendant had never been convicted: the abduction of his children.³⁵²

³⁴⁷ Polar, 369 F.3d at 1256-57 (affirming enhancement where defendant knew or should have known that his counterfeiting operation would facilitate fraudulently obtaining Social Security Card in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 408(a)(6)).

3. Motive

One court reversed an upward departure based on the defendant's motive to escape punishment for sexual misconduct, reasoning that motive had already been adequately taken into account by the guidelines.³⁵³

¹ Note: The following tables contain case law meant to be illustrative of the main issues arising in the immigration sentencing context. They are not, and cannot be, comprehensive of every case published on each issue. Please also note that, in the following tables, “MCA” means “modified categorical approach” and the description “Yes (MCA)” is used to denote those offenses that a court has found to be a drug trafficking offense or a crime of violence only after court records narrowed the statute of conviction under the modified categorical approach.

Table 1Risk of Serious Bodily Injury - §2L1.1(b)(6)

Conduct Created Serious Risk of Death or Serious Injury	Conduct Did Not Create Serious Risk of Death or Serious Injury
Carrying aliens in overloaded van ²	Carrying aliens in a hatchback ³
Concealing aliens in cargo area of van with boxes and luggage ⁴
Carrying aliens in bed of pickup truck ⁵	Carrying alien in modified space behind backseat of pickup truck ⁶
Transporting children on hot day with legs inside trunk open to passenger compartment ⁷
Aliens lying prone on floor of minivan ⁸	Aliens lying down in cargo area of minivan ⁹

²*U.S. v. Palomares-Alcantar*, 406 F.3d 966 (8th Cir. 2005) (20 individuals in van with capacity for between 7 and 15, without seats or seatbelts, at freeway speeds and on bald tires); U.S. v. Flores-Flores, 356 F.3d 861 (8th Cir. 2004) (transporting 11 illegal aliens from Arizona to Michigan in a van that had only four seats and seatbelts, requiring eight of the aliens to ride on the floor); U.S. v. Rio-Baena, 247 F.3d 722 (8th Cir. 2001) (transporting 21 aliens, including 8 children, in a van that had no seats or seatbelts for them); U.S. v. Ortiz, 242 F.3d 1078 (8th Cir. 2001) (transporting 23 illegal aliens in a van equipped with seats and seatbelts for 14 passengers); U.S. v. Ramirez-Martinez, 273 F.3d 903 (9th Cir. 2001) (twenty people in a dilapidated van without seats or seat belts), overruled on other grounds by U.S. v. Lopez, 484 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir. 2007) (en banc); U.S. v. Angwin, 271 F.3d 786 (9th Cir. 2001) (transporting 14 aliens, none of them seated or wearing a seatbelt, in motor home rated for 6 people that was likely to tip over), overruled on other grounds by U.S. v. Lopez, 484 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir. 2007); U.S. v. Hernandez-Guardado, 228 F.3d 1017 (9th Cir. 2000) (overloaded vans with passengers lying unrestrained on the floorboards); U.S. v. Munoz-Tello, 531 F.3d 1174 (10th Cir. 2008) (vehicle was 50% over capacity, leaving some occupants without seats and more without seatbelts); U.S. v. Cardena-Garcia, 362 F.3d 663 (10th Cir. 2004) (transporting 17 aliens in a van designed to hold only seven passengers).

³*U.S. v. Dixon*, 201 F.3d 1223 (9th Cir. 2000) (noting lack of evidence that hatchback area was airtight or that aliens were “unable to extricate themselves”).

⁵*U.S. v. Angeles-Mendoza*, 407 F.3d 742 (5th Cir. 2005) (transporting aliens in the back of their truck and modifying the vehicle to allow more smuggled aliens to fit in by removing the back seats); U.S. v. Cuyler, 298 F.3d 387 (5th Cir. 2002) (noting that “[a]liens who are unrestrained easily can be thrown from the bed of the pickup in the event of an accident or other driving maneuver of the sort that is unavoidable in highway driving”).

⁶*U.S. v. Torres-Flores*, 502 F.3d 885 (9th Cir. 2007).

⁷*U.S. v. Miguel*, 368 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2004).

⁸*U.S. v. Maldonado-Ramires*, 384 F.3d 1228 (10th Cir. 2004).

⁹*U.S. v. Solis-Garcia*, 420 F.3d 511 (5th Cir. 2005); see also U.S. v. McKinley, 272 F. App’x 412 (5th Cir. 2008) (enhancement did not apply to carrying aliens in the sleeper compartment of a tractor/trailer, covered by a “king-size” mattress weighing only 10-15 pounds).

Conduct Created Serious Risk of Death or Serious Injury	Conduct Did Not Create Serious Risk of Death or Serious Injury
Transporting alien whose body was stuffed in console and feet twisted underneath glove compartment ¹⁰
Transporting aliens on overcrowded boat without lifejackets while defendants attempted to ram Coast Guard vessels ¹¹
Carrying women on shelves of plywood underneath commercial truck in freezing weather ¹²
Guiding aliens through harsh areas without adequate preparation ¹³	Guiding aliens through harsh areas without evidence they were inadequately prepared ¹⁴
	Driving late at night ¹⁵

¹⁰ U.S. v. Rodriguez-Mesa, 443 F.3d 397, 400 (5th Cir. 2006).

¹¹ U.S. v. Rodriguez-Lopez, 363 F.3d 1134 (11th Cir. 2004).

¹² U.S. v. Kang, 225 F.3d 260 (2d Cir. 2000).

¹³ U.S. v. De Jesus-Ojeda, 515 F.3d 434 (5th Cir. 2008) (leading aliens through desert-like brush without adequate water supply); U.S. v. Garcia-Guerrero, 313 F.3d 892 (5th Cir. 2002) (leading aliens on 3-day trek through desert with only one bottle of water and 2 cans of food per person); U.S. v. Rodriguez-Cruz, 255 F.3d 1054, 1056 (9th Cir. 2001) (guiding through the mountains between Mexico and San Diego a group of “aliens who were obviously woefully under-equipped for the potential hazards that were known prior to departure”; although an unexpected snowstorm resulted in the death of some of the aliens, the enhancement was based on the preparations that were inadequate even for known risks).

¹⁴ U.S. v. Mateo Garza, 541 F.3d 290 (5th Cir. 2008) (holding that guiding aliens on foot through desert-like brush of South Texas in June, by itself, did not qualify for an enhancement in the absence of evidence that the aliens were inadequately prepared).

¹⁵ U.S. v. Aranda-Flores, 450 F.3d 1141 (10th Cir. 2006) (holding that falling asleep at the wheel, by itself, was negligence, not recklessness and noting lack of pre-trip conduct that would establish recklessness (i.e., not sleeping enough beforehand)).

¹¹¹ U.S. v. Cortez-Arias, 403 F.3d 1111 (9th Cir. 2005), abrogation recognized by U.S. v. Narvaez-Gomez, 489 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 2007).

¹¹² U.S. v. Narvaez-Gomez, 489 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 2007) (state case law included recklessness).

¹¹³ U.S. v. Alfaro, 408 F.3d 204 (5th Cir. 2005) (force was not necessarily directed against a person).

¹¹⁴ U.S. v. Jaimes-Jaimes, 406 F.3d 845 (7th Cir. 2005) (statute lacked an element that would establish the use of force was “against the person of another”).

¹¹⁵ U.S. v. Martinez-Martinez, 468 F.3d 604 (9th Cir. 2006) (conviction could be based on suitability for residency rather than actual occupancy).

¹¹⁶ U.S. v. Fernandez-Cusco, 447 F.3d 382 (5th Cir. 2006) (no plain error to apply enhancement to conviction for sexual penetration based on force or coercion); U.S. v. Lopez-Zepeda, 466 F.3d 651 (8th Cir. 2006) (statute required use of “force or coercion,” but plea statement established use of force).

¹¹⁷ U.S. v. Rosas-Pulido, 526 F.3d 829 (5th Cir. 2008) (statute prohibiting sexual contact “can include conduct that is not ‘forcible’ as that term is commonly understood”).

¹¹⁸ U.S. v. Sarmiento-Funes, 374 F.3d 336 (5th Cir. 2004) (“[T]he act of penetration itself is [not] enough to supply the force required under §2L1.2.”), superseded by rule as stated in U.S. v. Rodriguez-Juarez, 631 F.3d 192 (5th Cir. 2011) (citing USSG App C, amend. 722).

¹¹⁹ U.S. v. Beltran-Munguia, 489 F.3d 1042 (9th Cir. 2007) (statute did not require proof that force was used and could be applied in a case where an intoxicated victim gave invalid consent).

¹²⁰ U.S. v. Gonzalez-Jaquez, 566 F.3d 1250 (10th Cir. 2009) (California conviction for sexual battery is categorically a crime of violence).

¹²¹ U.S. v. Bonilla-Mungia, 422 F.3d 316 (5th Cir. 2005) (remanding to determine whether a crime of violence could be established); U.S. v. Lopez-Montanez, 421 F.3d 926 (9th Cir. 2005).

¹²² U.S. v. Yanez-Rodriguez, 555 F.3d 931 (10th Cir. 2009) (statute prohibits non-consensual sexual contact with another person, so it is a forcible sex offense), overruled on other grounds by U.S. v. Bullcoming, 579 F.3d 1200 (10th Cir. 2009).

¹²³ U.S. v. Gomez-Gomez, 493 F.3d 562 (5th Cir. 2007) (conviction could be obtained without proof that force was used), rev'd on other grounds by 547 F.3d 242 (5th Cir. 2008).

¹²⁴ U.S. v. Earle, 488 F.3d 537 (1st Cir. 2007).

¹²⁵ U.S. v. Hermoso-Garcia, 413 F.3d 1085 (9th Cir. 2005).

¹²⁶ U.S. v. Dominguez, 479 F.3d 345 (5th Cir. 2007).

¹²⁷ U.S. v. Llanos-Agostadero, 486 F.3d 1194 (11th Cir. 2007) (inasmuch as simple battery on a police officer is a crime of violence, so is simple battery of a pregnant woman).

¹²⁸ U.S. v. Barraza-Ramos, 550 F.3d 1246 (10th Cir. 2008) (statute of conviction enhanced the penalty for simple battery when the victim was pregnant, and simple battery did not require force).

¹⁴⁴ U.S. v. Moreno-Flores, 542 F.3d 445 (5th Cir. 2008) (kidnapping is not crime of violence under catchall because it could be based on “any other means of instilling fear” and not necessarily the use of physical force).

¹⁴⁵ U.S. v. Ortiz-Gomez, 562 F.3d 683 (5th Cir. 2009) (Pennsylvania conviction for terroristic threat is not a crime of violence because a realistic probability exists that the Pennsylvania courts would hold that a threat to commit arson with intent to terrorize another would constitute a violation of this statute); U.S. v. Martinez-Paramo, 380 F.3d 799 (5th Cir. 2004) (remanding to consider whether defendant pled to elements that established use of force).

¹⁴⁶ U.S. v. Naranjo-Hernandez, 133 F. App’x 96 (5th Cir. 2005).

¹⁴⁷ U.S. v. Hernandez-Hernandez, 431 F.3d 1212 (9th Cir. 2005).
