

Primer

Categorical Approach

Prepared by the Office of the General Counsel

DISCLAIMER

The Commission's legal staff publishes this document to assist in understanding and applying the sentencing guidelines. The information in this document should not be considered definitive or comprehensive. In addition, the information in this document does not necessarily represent the official position of the Commission on any particular issue or case, and it is not binding on the Commission, the courts, or the parties in any case. To the extent this document includes unpublished cases, practitioners should be cognizant of Fed. R. App. P. 32.1, as well as any corresponding rules in their jurisdictions.

Want to learn more about relevant statutes, case law, and guidelines on a specific topic? The Commission's legal staff offers a series of primers to assist in understanding and applying the sentencing guidelines on the following topics—

- Aggravating and Mitigating Role Adjustments
- Antitrust Offenses
- Categorical Approach
- Offenses Involving Commercial Sex Acts and Sexual Exploitation of Minors
- Computer Crimes
- Crime Victims' Rights
- Criminal History
- Departures and Variances
- Drug Offenses
- Economic Crime Victims
- Fines for Organizations
- Firearms Offenses
- Immigration Offenses
- Intellectual Property Offenses
- Loss Calculation under §2B1.1
- Relevant Conduct
- Retroactive Guideline Amendments
- RICO Offenses
- Selected Offenses Against the Person and VICAR
- Sexual Abuse and Failure to Register Offenses
- Supervised Release

Learn more at <https://www.ussc.gov/guidelines/primers>.

UNITED STATES SENTENCING COMMISSION

One Columbus Circle, N.E.
Suite 2-500, South Lobby
Washington, DC 20002-8002
T: (202) 502-4500
F: (202) 502-4699
www.ussc.gov || @theusscgov

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I.	INTRODUCTION	1
II.	THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH: ORIGIN AND APPLICATION	1
A.	Origin of the Categorical Approach and Modified Categorical Approach	2
B.	Basic Application Steps	3
1.	Identify the Relevant Federal Definition	3
a.	“Elements” or “force” clauses	4
b.	“Enumerated offenses” clauses	6
c.	Drug offense provisions	8
2.	Identify the Elements of the Defendant’s Prior Conviction	9
a.	Divisible and indivisible statutes	9
b.	Determining divisibility	10
c.	Remaining uncertainty	11
3.	Compare the Prior Conviction to the Federal Definition	12
III.	WHERE THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH IS APPLIED	13
A.	Statutes Where Courts Have Applied the Categorical Approach	14
1.	18 U.S.C. § 924(e) (Armed Career Criminal Act)	14
2.	18 U.S.C. §§ 921(a)(33)(A) (Misdemeanor Crime of Domestic Violence) and 922(g)(9) (Unlawful Possession of a Firearm)	15
3.	18 U.S.C. § 924(c) (Use of a Firearm During a Crime of Violence or Drug Trafficking Offense)	16
4.	18 U.S.C. § 2252 (Prior Sex Offense Convictions)	17
5.	18 U.S.C. § 16 (Crime of Violence Defined)	18
6.	Violent Crimes in Aid of Racketeering Activity (VICAR)	19
7.	Drug Offenses	19
B.	Guidelines Where Courts Have Applied the Categorical Approach	19
1.	Sections 4B1.1 and 4B1.2 (Career Offender Guideline and Definitions)	20
2.	Section 2L1.2 (Illegal Reentry)	21
3.	Section 7B1.1 (Grade of Violations)	22
IV.	CIRCUIT ISSUES	23
A.	Inchoate Offenses	23
1.	Application Note 1 to USSG §4B1.2	23
2.	Conspiracy and Attempt Offenses	24
a.	Conspiracy	24
b.	Attempt	26

B.	Differences in Breadth of the ACCA's and §4B1.2's Drug Offense Provisions	26
1.	“Involving” v. “Prohibits”	27
2.	Conduct or Generic Offenses	27
3.	Offers to Sell a Controlled Substance.....	29

I. INTRODUCTION

Various statutes and guidelines subject defendants to enhanced punishment if they have applicable instant and/or prior convictions for a violent crime or a serious drug offense. Courts employ the categorical approach and the modified categorical approach to determine whether a conviction qualifies as a predicate offense for purposes of such enhanced penalties. This primer provides a general overview of selected statutes, sentencing guidelines, and case law involving application of the categorical approach. Although this primer identifies some of the key cases and concepts related to the categorical approach, it is not a comprehensive compilation of authority nor intended to be a substitute for independent research and analysis of primary sources.

II. THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH: ORIGIN AND APPLICATION

In 1990, the Supreme Court established the “categorical approach” in Taylor v. United States,¹ and subsequently created the “modified categorical approach” in Shepard v. United States,² to determine whether a prior conviction qualifies as a “violent felony” or a “serious drug offense” for purposes of a sentencing enhancement under the Armed Career Criminal Act (“ACCA”).³ Since then, courts have applied the categorical approach and modified categorical approach to other statutes to determine whether an instant or prior offense qualifies as a predicate offense for purposes of establishing criminal liability or applying certain sentencing enhancements.⁴ Although the guidelines do not require use of the categorical approach, courts also have applied the categorical approach and modified categorical approach to determine whether an instant and/or prior conviction is a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense” for purposes of the career offender enhancement at §§4B1.1 (Career Offender) and 4B1.2 (Definitions of Terms Used in Section 4B1.1) and other guidelines discussed herein.⁵

The categorical approach is an analysis that looks to the statutory elements of an offense, rather than the facts of a defendant’s conduct in the underlying case, when determining the nature of a predicate conviction. To do so, courts evaluate the text of the

¹ 495 U.S. 575 (1990).

² 544 U.S. 13 (2005).

³ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e). The ACCA imposes a 15-year mandatory minimum penalty on defendants convicted of a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) (felon in possession of a firearm) who have three or more prior felony convictions for a “violent felony” or a “serious drug offense,” rather than the 10-year maximum penalty that would otherwise apply. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 924(a)(2), (e).

⁴ See 18 U.S.C. §§ 16(a) (defining “crime of violence”), 924(c) (defining “crime of violence” and “drug trafficking offense”); see also 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(43) (defining “aggravated felony” for purposes of deportation and removal pursuant to federal immigration law).

⁵ While Taylor and subsequent Supreme Court cases regarding the categorical approach apply only to statutory provisions, shortly after Taylor, circuits began applying the categorical approach to the guidelines, even though the guidelines do not require such an analysis.

statute of conviction, with the aid of case law. When statutes criminalize multiple offenses, courts review a limited class of judicial documents for the sole purpose of determining a particular defendant's offense of conviction.

The following sections summarize the origin of the categorical approach and modified categorical approach and describe the basic steps and threshold principles used in applying the categorical approach.

A. ORIGIN OF THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH AND MODIFIED CATEGORICAL APPROACH

The Supreme Court established the categorical approach in Taylor v. United States. In Taylor, the Court held that the categorical approach requires courts to look only to the statute of conviction, rather than the particular facts underlying the conviction, to determine whether the offense meets the definition of a “violent felony” in the ACCA.⁶ To make this determination, courts compare the elements of the offense described in the statute of conviction to the definition in the ACCA to determine if the offense criminalizes the same or a narrower range of conduct than the definition, as required to serve as a predicate offense.⁷

In Shepard v. United States, the Court held that courts may use a “modified categorical approach” in cases where the statute of conviction describes both conduct that fits within the applicable definition and conduct that does not.⁸ In applying the modified categorical approach, courts look not only to the statute of conviction but also may look to a limited list of judicial sources to determine the elements of the offense of conviction: “the terms of the charging document, the terms of a plea agreement or transcript of colloquy between judge and defendant in which the factual basis for the plea was confirmed by the defendant, or to some comparable judicial record of this information.”⁹ These documents are commonly referred to as “Shepard documents.”

Subsequently, in Descamps v. United States and Mathis v. United States, the Supreme Court held that courts may only apply the modified categorical approach if the court first determines that the statute of conviction is “divisible.”¹⁰ For this threshold inquiry, courts must inquire if the statute lists alternative elements or alternative means of committing the offense.¹¹

⁶ Taylor, 495 U.S. at 600.

⁷ Id. at 599.

⁸ 544 U.S. 13, 17–18 (2005).

⁹ Id. at 26.

¹⁰ See Mathis v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2243, 2256 (2016); Descamps v. United States, 570 U.S. 254, 258 (2013).

¹¹ Mathis, 136 S. Ct. at 2256.

If the statute describes multiple crimes with alternative elements, the statute is “divisible” and courts may use the modified categorical approach and Shepard documents to identify which of the alternative elements formed the basis of the defendant’s conviction and then determine whether the conviction meets the applicable definition.¹² But, if the statute describes a single crime and enumerates alternative means of committing the crime, the statute is “indivisible” and courts may not apply the modified categorical approach to determine if the means by which the defendant committed the crime meets the applicable definition.¹³

Courts may not look behind the “elements” of a statute of conviction to identify the “means” by which the defendant committed an offense.¹⁴ Instead, courts must look to the least serious conduct encompassed by the statutory elements to determine if an overbroad, indivisible statute qualifies as a predicate offense.¹⁵ Therefore, under Descamps and Mathis, if a statute of conviction is indivisible and criminalizes a broader range of conduct than the applicable definition requires, the entire statute is categorically disqualified as a predicate offense, even if reliable records show that the defendant’s conduct that formed the basis of the conviction otherwise would fall within such definition.¹⁶

B. BASIC APPLICATION STEPS

Applying the categorical approach can be best described as a three-step procedure.

1. Identify the Relevant Federal Definition

Courts first identify the definition of the statutory or guideline provision that triggers a higher penalty or enhanced sentence for a defendant’s instant offense. For example, the ACCA provides for higher penalties for firearms offenses if the defendant was previously convicted of three or more “violent felonies” or “serious drug offenses.”¹⁷ The career offender guideline at §4B1.1 provides for higher offense levels and a higher criminal ¹² Descamps, 570 U.S. at 278.

¹³ Id. at 258 (“[W]e hold that sentencing courts may not apply the modified categorical approach when the crime of which the defendant was convicted has a single, indivisible set of elements.”).

¹⁴ Mathis, 136 S. Ct. at 2257 (Courts “may not ask whether the defendant’s conduct—his particular means of committing the crime—falls within the generic definition.”); Descamps, 570 U.S. at 278 (“The modified approach does not authorize a sentencing court to substitute such a facts-based inquiry for an elements-based one.”).

¹⁵ See Moncrieffe v. Holder, 569 U.S. 184, 190–91 (2013) (“Because we examine what the state conviction necessarily involved, not the facts underlying the case, we must presume that the conviction ‘rested upon [nothing] more than the least of th[e] acts’ criminalized, and then determine whether even those acts are encompassed by the generic federal offense.” (citation omitted)).

¹⁶ See Descamps, 570 U.S. at 261 (“But if the statute sweeps more broadly than the generic crime, a conviction under that law cannot count as an ACCA predicate, even if the defendant actually committed the offense in its generic form.”).

¹⁷ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e).

history category for defendants who have two or more prior convictions for “crimes of violence” or “controlled substance offenses,” terms that are defined in §4B1.2.¹⁸

As discussed below, many federal statutes and guidelines contain definitions that use similar terms. Because courts typically interpret similar terms in the same way, courts have applied the same categorical approach analysis and case law interpreting a clause in one definition to also interpret the same category of clause in another definition.¹⁹

a. “Elements” or “force” clauses

An “elements” or “force” clause requires that the offense have an element of physical force against a person. For example, the ACCA defines a “violent felony” in part as a prior conviction that “has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against another.”²⁰ Section 4B1.2(a)(1) likewise defines a “crime of violence” as a felony offense that “has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another.”²¹

In the context of the ACCA, the Supreme Court has held “physical force against another” means that the crime necessarily must involve violent force—that is, “force capable of causing physical pain or injury to another person.”²² In so holding, the Court ¹⁸ U.S. SENT’G COMM’N, Guidelines Manual, §§4B1.1, 4B1.2 (Nov. 2021) [hereinafter USSG]. The definitions in the career offender guidelines also are used in other guidelines in the Guidelines Manual. See, e.g., USSG §§2K1.3 (Unlawful Receipt, Possession, or Transportation of Explosive Materials; Prohibited Transactions Involving Explosive Materials), 2K2.1 (Unlawful Receipt, Possession, or Transportation of Firearms or Ammunition; Prohibited Transactions Involving Firearms or Ammunitions), 2S1.1 (Laundering of Monetary Instruments; Engaging in Monetary Transactions in Property Derived from Unlawful Activity), 7B1.1 (Classification of Violations (Policy Statement)).

¹⁹ E.g., United States v. Harris, 853 F.3d 318, 320 (6th Cir. 2017) (“This provision [§4B1.2(a)(1)], often called the ‘elements clause,’ mirrors the elements clause in the Armed Career Criminal Act, and we typically interpret them the same way.”); United States v. Fritts, 841 F.3d 937, 940–42 n.4 (11th Cir. 2016) (because §4B1.2’s elements clause for a “crime of violence” and the ACCA’s elements clause for a “violent felony” are identical, “this Court often considers cases interpreting the language in the Sentencing Guidelines as authority in cases interpreting the language in the ACCA”); United States v. Calabretta, 831 F.3d 128, 134 (3d Cir. 2016) (“[W]e have interpreted the ‘crime of violence’ definition in the Guidelines identically to the ‘violent felony’ definition in ACCA.”); United States v. Smith, 775 F.3d 1262, 1267 (11th Cir. 2014) (interpreting the ACCA’s definition of “serious drug offense” and §4B1.2’s definition of “controlled substance offense” similarly); United States v. Crews, 612 F.3d 849, 856 (9th Cir. 2010) (“[T]he terms ‘violent felony’ in the ACCA, 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B)(ii), and ‘crime of violence’ in Guidelines section 4B1.2, are interpreted according to the same precedent.”), overruled on other grounds, Johnson v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2551, 2557 (2015) (holding the residual clause of the ACCA unconstitutionally vague); United States v. Woods, 576 F.3d 400, 403–04 (7th Cir. 2009) (because the language is identical in the ACCA’s “violent felony” and §4B1.2’s “crime of violence” definitions, “we therefore refer to the ACCA and the career offender provisions of the Guidelines interchangeably”).

²⁰ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B)(i) (emphasis added).

²¹ USSG §4B1.2(a)(1) (emphasis added).

²² Johnson v. United States, 559 U.S. 133, 140 (2010).

rejected the common law definition of “force,” which could be satisfied by even the slightest offensive touching, because it did not fit the context of the ACCA.²³ The Supreme Court has since further clarified that in the ACCA, “ ‘force capable of causing pain or injury,’ includes the amount of force necessary to overcome a victim’s resistance.”²⁴ However, the Court held that a “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence,” as defined by a force clause in 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A), could be supported by “the degree of force that supports a common-law battery conviction.”²⁵

In Leocal v. Ashcroft, the Court held that accidental or negligent conduct does not constitute the “use” of force in 18 U.S.C. § 16(a)’s force clause, explaining that the word “use” joined in context with the phrase “against the person or property of another” requires “active employment.”²⁶ Subsequently, in Voisine v. United States, the Court determined that a “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence,” as defined in a force clause found at 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A), could involve the use of force, even with a mens rea of recklessness; that section does not require the force be employed against the person or property of another.²⁷ Thereafter, circuit courts split as to whether recklessness could satisfy the ACCA’s force clause.²⁸ In Borden v. United States, the Supreme Court resolved this circuit split and determined that the ACCA’s force clause requires purposeful or knowing conduct, not mere recklessness.²⁹

Although force clauses are similar across different statutes and guidelines (and are thus often discussed interchangeably in court opinions), one notable difference among some force clause definitions is the inclusion of physical force against a person or against property, instead of solely against a person. For instance, 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A) includes ²³ Id. at 139; see also id. at 141 (“It is significant, moreover, that the meaning of “physical force” the Government would seek to import into this definition of “violent felony” is a meaning derived from a common-law misdemeanor.”).

²⁴ Stokeling v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 544, 552, 555 (2019) (internal citation omitted).

²⁵ United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 168 (2014).

²⁶ 543 U.S. 1, 9 (2004).

²⁷ 136 S. Ct. 2272, 2278 (2016).

²⁸ Borden v. United States, 141 S. Ct. 1817, 1823 (2021) (plurality opinion) (discussing the circuit split).

²⁹ Id. at 1825; see also id. at 1835 (Thomas, J., concurring in the judgment). The plurality explained that “Voisine thus focused exclusively on the word ‘use’” because the statute at issue in that case “lacks the ensuing phrase ‘against the person of another.’” Id. at 1833. And it is the phrase “ ‘against the person of another,’ when modifying the ‘use of physical force,’ [which] introduces that action’s conscious object,” and thus excludes reckless conduct. Id. Circuit courts subsequently have applied Borden to the materially identical force clauses in 18 U.S.C. § 16(a), 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A), and the career offender guideline definition, USSG §4B1.2(a). See United States v. Arreola-Mendoza, No. 20-40068, 2021 WL 5513985, at *1 (5th Cir. Nov. 24, 2021) (section 16(a)); United States v. Quinones, 16 F.4th 414, 420 (3rd Cir. 2021) (guidelines); United States v. Martin, 15 F.4th 878, 883 (8th Cir. 2021) (guidelines); Flores v. U.S. Att’y Gen., No. 21-10514, 2021 WL 4317122, at *3 (11th Cir. Sept. 23, 2021) (section 16(a)); United States v. Mejia-Quintanilla, 857 F. App’x 956, 957 (9th Cir. 2021) (section 924(c)(3)(A)); United States v. Mjones, No. 20-8029, 2021 WL 4078002, at *2 n.2 (10th Cir. July 13, 2021) (section 924(c)(3)(A)); United States v. Ash, 7 F.4th 962, 962 (10th Cir. 2021) (guidelines).

a force clause requiring the force be used “against the person or property of another,” while §4B1.2 includes a force clause requiring the force be used “against the person of another.”³⁰ As a result, a statute of conviction criminalizing force against property qualifies under section 924(c) but does not qualify under the guidelines.³¹

b. “Enumerated offenses” clauses

Terms like “violent felony” or “crime of violence” also can be defined by a list of specific offenses whose generic elements qualify as a predicate offense.³² For example, the ³⁰ 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A).

³¹ For example, Hobbs Act robbery, 18 U.S.C. § 1951, can be committed through force or threats of force against property as well as a person. As a result, six circuits have held that Hobbs Act robbery is not a categorical match with the force clause at §4B1.2. United States v. Green, 996 F.3d 176, 184 (4th Cir. 2021); Bridges v. United States, 991 F.3d 793, 801–02 (7th Cir. 2021); United States v. Eason, 953 F.3d 1184, 1194–95 (11th Cir. 2020); United States v. Rodriguez, 770 F. App’x 18, 21 (3d Cir. 2019); United States v. Camp, 903 F.3d 594, 604 (6th Cir. 2018); United States v. O’Connor, 874 F.3d 1147, 1158 (10th Cir. 2017). Accord United States v. Edling, 895 F.3d 1153, 1157–58 (9th Cir. 2018) (Nevada robbery statute does not categorically qualify as a “crime of violence” under §4B1.2(a) because the statute encompasses force against property). By contrast, every circuit but the D.C. Circuit (which has not yet addressed the issue) has held that Hobbs Act robbery categorically qualifies as a “crime of violence” under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) because that provision includes force against property or a person. United States v. Garcia-Ortiz, 904 F.3d 102, 107–09 (1st Cir. 2018); United States v. Hill, 890 F.3d 51, 60 (2d Cir. 2018); United States v. Walker, 990 F.3d 316, 325–26 (3d Cir. 2021), petition for cert. filed, No. 21-102; United States v. Mathis, 932 F.3d 242, 266 (4th Cir. 2019); United States v. Buck, 847 F.3d 267, 275 (5th Cir. 2017); United States v. Gooch, 850 F.3d 285, 291–92 (6th Cir. 2017); United States v. Fox, 878 F.3d 574, 579 (7th Cir. 2017); United States v. Jones, 919 F.3d 1064, 1072 (8th Cir. 2019); United States v. Dominguez, 954 F.3d 1251, 1260–61 (9th Cir. 2020) (citing United States v. Mendez, 992 F.2d 1488, 1491 (9th Cir. 1993)), petition for cert. filed, No. 20-1000; United States v. Melgar-Cabrera, 892 F.3d 1053, 1066 (10th Cir. 2018); United State v. St. Hubert, 909 F.3d 335, 345 (11th Cir. 2018), overruled in part on other grounds by United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019).

³² Many statutory provisions also include or included now-defunct residual clauses, which were catchall provisions—i.e., “or otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another,” 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B)(ii)—to define applicable terms. In Johnson v. United States, 576 U.S. 591 (2015), the Supreme Court invalidated the residual clause in 18 U.S.C. § 924(e) as unconstitutionally vague. However, Congress has not yet altered section 924(e) in response to Johnson. The Supreme Court also invalidated the residual clause in 18 U.S.C. § 16(b) in Sessions v. Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. 1204 (2018), and the residual clause in 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(B) in United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019).

Separately, in 2016, the Commission promulgated an amendment that removed the residual clause from the “career offender” definition of a “crime of violence” at §4B1.2(a)(2). USSG App. C, amend. 798 (effective Aug. 1, 2016) (amending §4B1.2(a)(2), among other things, to remove the residual clause in the definition of a “crime of violence”). Before 2016, §4B1.2(a)(2) alternatively defined a “crime of violence” as an offense that is one of the enumerated offenses or “otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another.” See USSG §4B1.2(a)(2) (effective Nov. 1, 2015).

Although §4B1.2’s residual clause was removed from the guidelines, the Supreme Court upheld the validity of §4B1.2’s residual clause, holding that the guidelines are not subject to a vagueness challenge due to their advisory nature. Beckles v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 886, 894–95 (2017). As a result, the now-excised residual clause in the career offender guideline remains valid for those defendants sentenced under the guidelines prior to August 2016. See United States v. Smith, 881 F.3d 954, 956 (6th Cir. 2018) (reaffirming a prior decision that a state robbery statute is a crime of violence under §4B1.2’s residual clause in light of Beckles); United States v. Jones, 878 F.3d 10, 14 (2d Cir. 2017) (holding, post-Beckles, that a state robbery statute

ACCA alternatively defines “violent felony” to include a felony which “is burglary, arson, or extortion, [or] involves the use of explosives.”³³ Section 4B1.2(a)(2) also provides an alternative definition of “crime of violence” by listing specific offenses: “is murder, voluntary manslaughter, kidnapping, aggravated assault, a forcible sex offense, robbery, arson, extortion, or the use or unlawful possession of a firearm described in 26 U.S.C. § 5845(a) or explosive material as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 841(c).”³⁴

To determine what constitutes the “generic” version of an offense, courts have looked to a number of factors, including state penal codes and Congressional intent,³⁵ related federal statutes,³⁶ the Model Penal Code,³⁷ Supreme Court and circuit case law,³⁸ criminal law treatises and legal dictionaries,³⁹ and definitions specifically provided in the guidelines.⁴⁰ For offenses not developed in the common law, courts have looked at the plain, ordinary meaning of the statutory language,⁴¹ including examining regular qualified as a crime of violence under the career offender guideline’s residual clause). However, Beckles may not apply to sentences imposed when the guidelines were mandatory. See Shea v. United States, 976 F.3d 63, 81–82 (1st Cir. 2020); Cross v. United States, 892 F.3d 288, 291 (7th Cir. 2018). But see United States v. Carr, 946 F.3d 598, 600 n.3 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (discussing a circuit conflict regarding defendants’ ability to bring post-conviction challenges on a mandatory guidelines vagueness theory). Because residual clauses are no longer in effect, this primer does not address them further.

³³ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B)(ii) (emphasis added).

³⁴ USSG §4B1.2(a)(2) (emphasis added).

³⁵ See Quarles v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 1872, 1878 (2019) (a majority of state burglary laws proscribed remaining-in burglary when ACCA was enacted, showing that Congress likely intended generic burglary to include burglars who formed intent to commit a crime at any time while unlawfully remaining in a building or structure); United States v. Stitt, 139 S. Ct. 399, 406 (2018) (the majority of state burglary laws at the time of ACCA’s enactment covered vehicles adapted or customarily used for lodging); Esquivel-Quintana v. Sessions, 137 S. Ct. 1562, 1571–72 (2017) (at the time of the definition’s addition to the Immigration and Nationality Act, a significant majority of states set the age of consent at 16-years-old, supporting a generic definition of statutory rape where the victim is younger than 16); United States v. Gonzalez-Ramirez, 477 F.3d 310, 317–18 (5th Cir. 2007) (after surveying the law of all 50 states, determining that because a majority of the states rejected any specific purpose requirement, such a requirement was not part of the “generic” definition of kidnapping under §2L1.2).

³⁶ Esquivel-Quintana, 137 S. Ct. at 1570.

³⁷ See, e.g., United States v. Torres-Diaz, 438 F.3d 529, 536 (5th Cir. 2006) (The “primary source for the generic contemporary meaning of . . . [a category of offenses] is the Model Penal Code.”).

³⁸ See Quarles, 139 S. Ct. at 1877.

³⁹ See, e.g., United States v. Iniguez-Barba, 485 F.3d 790, 793 (5th Cir. 2007) (relying on Black’s Law Dictionary along with legislative history).

⁴⁰ USSG §4B1.2, comment. (n.1) (providing definitions for “forcible sex offense” and “extortion”).

⁴¹ See, e.g., United States v. Alfaro, 835 F.3d 470, 474–75 (4th Cir. 2016) (looking at the plain and ordinary meaning of the guidelines’ language to determine whether a Maryland conviction is a “forcible sex offense” under §2L1.2); United States v. Ramirez-Garcia, 646 F.3d 778, 783 (11th Cir. 2011) (courts define a generic offense based on “the ordinary, contemporary, and common meaning of the statutory words” for offenses not developed in the common law (quoting United States v. Padilla-Reyes, 247 F.3d 1158, 1163 (11th Cir. 2001))).

dictionaries.⁴² Thus, whether the offense of conviction has the same title as an enumerated offense does not dispose of the issue.⁴³

c. Drug offense provisions

Terms such as “serious drug offense” in the ACCA and “controlled substance offense” in §4B1.2(b) target offenses more serious than mere possession, such as distribution, manufacturing, and possession with intent to distribute or manufacture.⁴⁴ The ACCA, for instance, defines a serious drug offense as an offense under specific federal statutes or “an offense under State law, involving manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute, a controlled substance” with a sentence of at least ten years.⁴⁵ Section 4B1.2(b) defines a “controlled substance offense” as “an offense under federal or state law” with a maximum term of more than one year of imprisonment “that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute, or dispense.”⁴⁶ Notably, the ACCA’s serious drug offense provision differs from §4B1.2(b)’s “controlled substance offense” definition in several important respects. These differences include: (1) the ACCA’s requirement that state offenses have at least a ten-year statutory maximum, whereas §4B1.2 requires only that predicates be punishable by more than a year of imprisonment; (2) the ACCA’s explicit inclusion of federal offenses under the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. § 801); and (3) the ACCA’s inclusion of state offenses involving the enumerated acts, whereas §4B1.2(b) requires the offense of conviction prohibits the enumerated acts, listed in each definition.⁴⁷

Notably, in Shular v. United States, the Supreme Court held the ACCA’s definition of a “serious drug offense” under section 924(e)(2)(A)(ii) lists unlawful conduct (akin to a force clause), not generic offenses (akin to an enumerated offense clause).⁴⁸ It is unclear, however, whether the same analysis applies to §4B1.2(b)’s definition of “controlled substance offense,” as discussed more fully infra.⁴⁹

⁴² See, e.g., Padilla-Reyes, 247 F.3d 1163 (looking at Webster’s Third New International Dictionary, in addition to Black’s Law Dictionary, in order to define “sexual abuse of a minor” under its plain meaning that comports with common usage).

⁴³ Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 599 (1990).

⁴⁴ See 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A) (definition of “serious drug offense”); USSG §4B1.2(b).

⁴⁵ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A)(i)–(ii).

⁴⁶ USSG §4B1.2(b).

⁴⁷ Compare 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A), with USSG §4B1.2(b).

⁴⁸ 140 S. Ct. 779, 782 (2020) (“The ‘serious drug offense’ definition requires only that the state offense involve the conduct specified in the federal statute; it does not require that the state offense match certain generic offenses.”).

⁴⁹ See infra notes 168–70 and accompanying text.

2. Identify the Elements of the Defendant's Prior Conviction

Next, courts identify the elements of the state or federal statute underlying the defendant's prior conviction. The key for this step is determining the crime of which the defendant was convicted. To determine the defendant's crime, courts look only to the elements of the statute of conviction—that is, what necessarily is required to be proven for the defendant to be convicted of the crime.⁵⁰ Thus, courts examine only the text of the statute of conviction and case law interpreting the meaning of that statute at the time of the defendant's conviction, as prior convictions may be decades-old and the statute or case law interpreting the statute may have changed.⁵¹ The statute's title is not determinative.⁵²

a. Divisible and indivisible statutes

If the statute of conviction is alternatively phrased, the court must determine whether the statute is divisible (listing multiple crimes comprised of different elements) or indivisible (listing one crime comprised of various factual means of commission). An element must be proven for conviction, establishing a distinct crime, while a means is merely one method of committing a crime that does not necessarily need to be proven for conviction under the statute.⁵³

When a statute is divisible, courts are permitted to use the modified categorical approach and to examine select judicial documents, i.e., the Shepard documents, to determine which crime the defendant was convicted of committing. For example, the Fourth Circuit has held that 18 U.S.C. § 1513(b)(1), which criminalizes retaliating against a witness, is divisible because it has alternative elements: engaging in or threatening bodily injury, and engaging in or threatening damage to property.⁵⁴ Therefore, where the Shepard

⁵⁰ Taylor, 495 U.S. at 600 (courts are not permitted to consider the conduct of a defendant when applying the categorical approach, only the elements of the predicate statute of conviction).

⁵¹ McNeill v. United States, 563 U.S. 816, 821 (2011) (“[W]hen determining whether a defendant was convicted of a ‘violent felony,’ we have turned to the version of state law that the defendant was actually convicted of violating.”).

⁵² See, e.g., Johnson v. United States, 559 U.S. 133, 138 (2010) (comparing Florida’s “battery” statute with the generic definition of “battery”); In re Sealed Case, 548 F.3d 1085, 1089–90 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (comparing D.C. “robbery” definition with the generic definition).

⁵³ Mathis v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2243, 2248 (2016). The Court stressed that at a trial, elements “are what the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt to convict the defendant, and at a plea hearing, they are what the defendant necessarily admits when he pleads guilty.” Id. (internal citations omitted). The Court explained that facts, by contrast, are “mere real-world things—extraneous to the crime’s legal requirements They are ‘circumstance[s]’ or ‘event[s]’ having no ‘legal effect [or] consequence’: In particular, they need neither be found by a jury nor admitted by a defendant.” Id. (quoting Fact, Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014)).

⁵⁴ United States v. Allred, 942 F.3d 641, 649–52 (4th Cir. 2019), cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 1235 (2020).

documents revealed a defendant was convicted of the “bodily injury” variant, the Fourth Circuit examined only whether that variant met the applicable definition.⁵⁵

When a statute is indivisible, courts may not use the modified categorical approach and may not examine Shepard documents to determine whether the defendant’s offense of conviction is a predicate offense. For example, in Mathis v. United States, the Supreme Court held that Iowa’s burglary statute was indivisible despite setting out disjunctively “building, other structure, or vehicle” as possible sites of burglaries because the Iowa Supreme Court had held these alternatives were different methods of committing one offense, rather than alternative elements of different offenses.⁵⁶ Thus, a lower court’s resort to the modified categorical approach was erroneous—the facts underlying the defendant’s conviction (i.e., whether what he burgled was a building, a structure, or a vehicle) were irrelevant.⁵⁷

b. Determining divisibility

The line between divisibility and indivisibility, however, is not always clear.⁵⁸ A statute’s listing of verbs or phrases in the disjunctive does not necessarily mean it lists elements.⁵⁹ The Supreme Court has set forth several tools to help determine what are means and what are elements. The first is whether the court presiding over the statute’s jurisdiction (e.g., the presiding state court, if a state statute is at issue) has held whether the statute comprises elements or means.⁶⁰ Second, the statutory text may resolve the inquiry, either by directly stating that the alternatives must be charged as elements or are only illustrative means, or by imposing different punishments for the different alternatives, necessitating unanimous jury agreement as a matter of constitutional law.⁶¹

⁵⁵ Id. at 652.

⁵⁶ Mathis, 136 S. Ct. at 2256.

⁵⁷ Id. at 2253–54.

⁵⁸ Descamps v. United States, 570 U.S. 254, 279 (2013) (Kennedy, J., concurring) (“[T]he dichotomy between divisible and indivisible state criminal statutes is not all that clear.”).

⁵⁹ Mathis v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2243, 2249–50 (2016).

⁶⁰ Id. at 2256 (noting that the Iowa Supreme Court had held that the Iowa statute in question comprises alternative methods of committing one offense, so that a jury need not agree on which method the defendant used to convict him).

⁶¹ Id. In Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000), the Court held that, aside from the fact of a prior conviction, any fact increasing the statutory maximum for a penalty is constitutionally required to be submitted to a jury and proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Importantly, while alternatives being subject to different penalties demonstrates they are elements rather than means, Apprendi does not demand that alternatives carrying the same penalty are necessarily means. The Third Circuit has stated that identical punishments for the alternatives “could indicate that the alternatives are means.” United States v. Aviles, 938 F.3d 503, 513 (3d Cir. 2019), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 2776 (2021). The Second Circuit, while having previously noted that alternatives carrying the same penalty is in line with indivisibility, Harbin v. Sessions, 860 F.3d 58, 65 (2d Cir. 2017), also has held a statute divisible where the penalties for the alternatives were the same, Chery v. Garland, 16 F.4th 980, 985–86 (2d Cir. 2021). The Sixth and Tenth Circuits, albeit in unpublished opinions, also have rejected the argument that alternatives must be means due to carrying the same punishment. United States v. Mjones, No. 20-8029, 2021 WL 4078002, at *7 (10th Cir. July 13, 2021);

If neither a presiding court decision nor the statutory text provides a clear answer, sentencing courts may “peek” at the record of the conviction itself for the limited purpose of determining whether the listed items are elements. For example, if one count of an indictment and the corresponding jury instructions both charge a defendant with burgling a “building, structure, or vehicle,” then those documents indicate that each term is only a possible means of commission, not an element that the prosecutor must prove to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.⁶² Notably, the Supreme Court has cautioned that record materials will not always clearly answer the divisibility question, and if they do not “speak plainly,” then they cannot satisfy “Taylor’s demand for certainty.”⁶³

c. Remaining uncertainty

Even after a statute is determined to be divisible, the Shepard documents still may not be clear as to which element the defendant was convicted of—for example, the charging document may list multiple elements and the judgment may offer no further clarification.⁶⁴ When Shepard documents are ambiguous as to which element supported the conviction, the ambiguity is decided in the defendant’s favor—thus, the court must assume the defendant committed the least culpable element (and the least culpable means of committing that element).⁶⁵

Banks v. United States, 773 F. App’x 814, 820 (6th Cir. 2019); United States v. Burtons, 696 F. App’x 372, 378 (10th Cir. 2017); see also United States v. Degeare, 884 F.3d 1241, 1253 (10th Cir. 2018) (noting that a set of alternatives did not carry different penalties but stating this did not resolve the question).

⁶² Mathis, 136 S. Ct. at 2256–57. The Court noted that conversely, an indictment and jury instruction that only reference one alternative term to the exclusion of others could indicate that the statute contains a list of elements, each one of which must be proven to a jury. Id. at 2257.

⁶³ Id. at 2257 (quoting Shepard, 544 U.S. at 21). In Taylor v. United States, the Supreme Court cited three main factors in adopting a statutory-based categorical approach instead of a conduct-based one: (1) the language of section 924(e) indicates that Congress intended the sentencing court to determine if a defendant had been convicted of crimes falling within certain categories, rather than look to the facts of the offenses; (2) the legislative history showed that Congress generally took a categorical approach to predicate offenses; and (3) that practical difficulties and potential unfairness of a factual approach are “daunting.” 495 U.S. 575, 600–01 (1990).

⁶⁴ Johnson v. United States, 559 U.S. 133, 137 (2010).

⁶⁵ Id. (assuming that the defendant’s Florida battery conviction was for an unwanted “touch” because the Shepard documents were ambiguous). In most contexts that use the categorical approach, such as the ACCA in Johnson, the burden is on the government to prove that the defendant has a certain number of qualifying convictions and thus ambiguities are decided in favor of the defendant. In contexts in which the burden is on the defendant to prove the absence of a qualifying conviction under the categorical approach, ambiguous Shepard documents may lead to the opposite result. See Pereida v. Wilkinson, 141 S. Ct. 754, 767 (2021) (in the cancellation-of-removal context under the INA, ambiguous Shepard documents mean that the movant loses under the modified categorical approach because he has the burden of proving he does not have prior convictions for crimes involving moral turpitude).

3. Compare the Prior Conviction to the Federal Definition

After identifying the relevant federal definition (step one) and the elements of the defendant's statute of conviction (step two), the final step is to determine whether the statute of conviction categorically "matches" the definition at issue. Courts must assume, for purposes of comparison with the federal definition (step three), that the defendant committed the least culpable conduct necessary to sustain a conviction under that statute, irrespective of the defendant's actual conduct.⁶⁶ A categorical match means that the least culpable method of violating the statute is no broader than (in other words, is narrower than or equivalent to) the relevant definition. If a statute reaches more conduct than the definition, then it is overbroad and categorically does not qualify.

As explained above, this analysis is limited to comparing the applicable definition to only what a jury necessarily found in reaching the prior conviction or to which a defendant necessarily pleaded guilty (i.e., the least culpable act that violates the statute of conviction). The court may not consider the defendant's actual underlying conduct. Further, even when the court is permitted to review Shepard documents under the modified categorical approach, the focus of the court's inquiry remains only on determining the statute of conviction and not the underlying conduct.

However, though the court must consider the least culpable conduct necessary for a conviction under the statute, there must be a "realistic probability, not a theoretical possibility" that a state would apply its statute to that conduct.⁶⁷ Courts generally have held that such a realistic probability exists where the statute "explicitly defines a crime more broadly than the generic definition" or where the defendant points to a case "in which the state courts did in fact apply the statute in the special (nongeneric) manner for which he argues."⁶⁸

Most circuits have held that the plain language of a statute can make clear that it applies to conduct not covered by a federal definition, regardless of the lack of any example case applying the statute to those exact facts.⁶⁹ For example, the Tenth Circuit held that an ⁶⁶ Moncrieffe v. Holder, 569 U.S. 184, 190–91 (2013); see also Johnson, 559 U.S. at 137 (district court had to assume that the defendant's state conviction rested on nothing more than the "least of these acts"). At least one circuit has concluded that when comparing elements of prior convictions with the elements of crimes under federal law, the categorical approach requires comparison with only the "most similar" federal crime rather than any possible federal crime. Rosa v. Att'y Gen. U.S., 950 F.3d 67, 76 (3d Cir. 2020).

⁶⁷ Gonzales v. Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. 183, 193 (2007).

⁶⁸ United States v. Baldon, 956 F.3d 1115, 1124 (9th Cir. 2020) (first quoting Chavez-Solis v. Lynch, 803 F.3d 1004, 1009 (9th Cir. 2015), then quoting Duenas-Alvarez, 549 U.S. at 193); see also United States v. Coats, 8 F.4th 1228, 1247 (11th Cir. 2021).

⁶⁹ See, e.g., Gonzalez v. Wilson, 990 F.3d 654, 660–61 (8th Cir. 2021); United States v. Cantu, 964 F.3d 924, 934 (10th Cir. 2020) ("[W]e have held that a defendant need not come forward with instances of actual prosecution when the 'plain language' of the statute proscribes the conduct at issue."); Portee v. United States, 941 F.3d 263, 273 (7th Cir. 2019); Hylton v. Sessions, 897 F.3d 57, 63–64 (2d Cir. 2018); Swaby v. Yates, 847 F.3d 62, 66 (1st Cir. 2017); Chavez-Solis, 803 F.3d at 1009–10; United States v. Aparicio-Soria, 740 F.3d

Oklahoma statute forbidding pointing a firearm at another was not a violent felony under the ACCA's force clause where the statute included purposes of "whimsy, humor or prank" in addition to violent purposes such as threats of physical injury.⁷⁰ Although the defendant had not presented a case where Oklahoma prosecuted someone for pointing a firearm for purposes of whimsy, humor, or prank, the Tenth Circuit explained "no legal imagination is required to see that the threatened use of physical force is not necessary for a conviction" because "the statute lists means to commit [the] crime that would render the crime non-violent under the ACCA's force clause."⁷¹

Absent such clarity, courts have required a showing that a state actually has applied its statute to specific conduct for there to be a realistic probability that it applies to broader conduct than the federal definition.⁷² For example, the Fourth Circuit held that a South Carolina statute prohibiting assaulting, beating, or wounding a police officer did not meet the ACCA's force clause because in a prior South Carolina case, a defendant was convicted of that offense for "spitting blood on an officer's boot," providing a realistic probability that the offense could be premised upon rude or angry contact rather than violent contact.⁷³

III. WHERE THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH IS APPLIED

As noted above, courts use the categorical approach to interpret and analyze definitions found throughout federal statutes and the guidelines in provisions that enhance punishment for those who have committed acts of violence or certain drug offenses. This section discusses several common statutes and guidelines where courts have applied the categorical approach.

152, 157 (4th Cir. 2014); United States v. Lara, 590 F. App'x 574, 584 (6th Cir. 2014); Ramos v. U.S. Att'y Gen., 709 F.3d 1066, 1072 (11th Cir. 2013); Jean-Louis v. Att'y Gen. of U.S., 582 F.3d 462, 481 (3d Cir. 2009). But see United States v. Castillo-Rivera, 853 F.3d 218, 222 (5th Cir. 2017) (en banc) ("It is telling that, despite these many evident opportunities, Castillo-Rivera does not point to any case in which Texas courts actually applied [the Texas statute] . . . to a defendant who could not also be covered by [the generic federal statute].").

⁷⁰ United States v. Titties, 852 F.3d 1257, 1274–75 (10th Cir. 2017).

⁷¹ Id.

⁷² See, e.g., United States v. Scott, 990 F.3d 94, 106 (2d Cir. 2021); United States v. Burghardt, 939 F.3d 397, 408 (1st Cir. 2019); United States v. Mendez, 924 F.3d 1122, 1126 (10th Cir. 2019); United States v. Jones, 914 F.3d 893, 903 (4th Cir. 2019); United States v. Maldonado, 864 F.3d 893, 900 (8th Cir. 2017); United States v. Jennings, 860 F.3d 450, 460 (7th Cir. 2017); United States v. Castillo-Rivera, 853 F.3d 218, 222 (5th Cir. 2017) (en banc); United States v. Quarles, 850 F.3d 836, 837 (6th Cir. 2017), aff'd 139 S. Ct. 1872 (2019) (regarding a different issue); United States v. Acevedo-De La Cruz, 844 F.3d 1147, 1152 (9th Cir. 2017); United States v. White, 837 F.3d 1225, 1230 (11th Cir. 2016).

⁷³ Jones, 914 F.3d at 903 (discussing State v. Burton, 356 S.C. 259 (2003)).

A. STATUTES WHERE COURTS HAVE APPLIED THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH

The Supreme Court has held that the categorical approach applies to the definitions of “crime of violence” in 18 U.S.C. § 16;⁷⁴ “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence,” in 18 U.S.C. § 921(a)(33)(A);⁷⁵ the definition of “crime of violence” in 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3);⁷⁶ and the definition of “violent felony” in 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2).⁷⁷ Although the Supreme Court has not addressed the issue, the circuit courts also have applied the categorical approach to determining if a defendant qualifies for an enhancement for having committed a prior enumerated sexual offense under 18 U.S.C. § 2252.⁷⁸

1. 18 U.S.C. § 924(e) (Armed Career Criminal Act)

Section 922(g) of title 18, United States Code, makes it a crime for certain classes of person (such as those who previously have been convicted of a felony or are fugitives from justice) to possess or transport a firearm and typically carries a maximum penalty of ten years’ imprisonment.⁷⁹ Section 924(e) provides that any person who violates section 922(g) and who has three previous convictions committed on separate occasions⁸⁰ for a “violent felony” or a “serious drug offense,” or both, is subject to a mandatory minimum of fifteen years’ imprisonment.

A “violent felony” must satisfy either: (1) a force clause (“has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another”); or (2) an enumerated offenses clause (“is burglary, arson, or extortion, or involves use of explosives”).⁸¹ A “serious drug offense” must either be: (1) an offense under certain federal statutes like the Controlled Substances Act; or (2) a state offense with a statutory maximum ⁷⁴ Sessions v. Dimaya, 138 S. Ct. 1204, 1211 (2018).

⁷⁵ United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 168 (2014).

⁷⁶ United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319, 2327–31 (2019).

⁷⁷ Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 600 (1990).

⁷⁸ See infra section III.A.2.

⁷⁹ 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g), 924(a)(2).

⁸⁰ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(1) (ACCA predicates must have been “committed on occasions different from one another” to count as separate predicates). Historically, circuit courts have determined if offenses were committed on “separate occasions” for purposes of the ACCA by focusing on factors like whether it is possible to discern the point at which one offense was completed and another offense began, whether it would have been possible for an offender to cease criminal conduct after the first offense without committing the second offense, and whether the offenses are committed in different locations. See, e.g., United States v. Hennessee, 932 F.3d 437, 444 (6th Cir. 2019). The Supreme Court has granted a writ of certiorari to consider whether multiple crimes committed sequentially in a spree constitute “separate occasions.” Wooden v. United States, 141 S. Ct. 1370 (2021).

⁸¹ 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B). Section 924(e) also contains a residual clause (“or otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another”), but in Johnson v. United States, the Supreme Court held the residual clause is unconstitutionally void for vagueness. 576 U.S. 591, 593, 606 (2015); see supra note 32.

of ten years or more that “involv[es] manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance.”⁸² In Shular v. United States, the Supreme Court determined that the state offense provision requires using a categorical approach that compares the elements of a state statute with the conduct described; the Court rejected the argument that the state offense provision creates a definition premised on generic offenses.⁸³

Appendix A in the Guidelines Manual references section 924(e) offenses to §2K2.1 (Unlawful Receipt, Possession, or Transportation of Firearms or Ammunition; Prohibited Transactions Involving Firearms or Ammunition) and §4B1.4 (Armed Career Criminal).⁸⁴ Section 2K2.1 provides for higher base offense levels if a defendant has sustained one or two or more prior felony convictions for either a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense.”⁸⁵ Section 4B1.4 provides that a defendant who is subject to an enhanced sentence under the provisions of section 924(e) is an armed career criminal.⁸⁶ The Commentary to §4B1.4, Application Note 1, notes that the terms “violent felony” and “serious drug offense” in section 924(e)(2) are not identical to the definitions of “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” used in §4B1.1, and the time periods for the counting of prior sentences under §4A1.2 (Definitions and Instructions for Computing Criminal History) do not apply to the determination of whether a defendant is subject to an enhanced sentence under section 924(e).⁸⁷

2. 18 U.S.C. §§ 921(a)(33)(A) (Misdemeanor Crime of Domestic Violence) and 922(g)(9) (Unlawful Possession of a Firearm)

Section 922(g)(9) of title 18, United States Code, makes it a crime for a person who previously has been convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence to possess or transport a firearm and typically carries a maximum penalty of ten years’ imprisonment.⁸⁸ Section 921(a)(33)(A) defines “misdemeanor crime of domestic violence” as a misdemeanor which ⁸² 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(A)(i)–(ii) (A “serious drug offense” must be an offense under: the Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. § 801, et seq.; the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act, 21 U.S.C. § 951, et seq.; chapter 705 of title 46, for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed by law; or an offense under state law involving manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed by law.).

⁸³ 140 S. Ct. 779, 782 (2020).

⁸⁴ See USSG App. A (Statutory Index).

⁸⁵ See USSG §2K2.1(a)(1)–(4).

⁸⁶ See USSG §4B1.4(a). Section 4B1.4 also provides for the greater of alternative offense levels and criminal history category based upon certain circumstances. USSG §4B1.4(b) and (c).

⁸⁷ USSG §4B1.4, comment. (n.1).

⁸⁸ See 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(g)(9), 924(a)(2).

has, as an element, the use or attempted use of physical force, or the threatened use of a deadly weapon, committed by a current or former spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim, by a person with whom the victim shares a child in common, by a person who is cohabiting with or has cohabited with the victim as a spouse, parent, or guardian, or by a person similarly situated to a spouse, parent, or guardian of the victim.⁸⁹

The Supreme Court has held that in a section 922(g)(9) prosecution, the predicate-offense statute need not require, as an element, the existence of a domestic relationship between the offender and the victim; however, the prosecution must prove the existence of a domestic relationship beyond a reasonable doubt.⁹⁰ The force clause, however, is interpreted under the categorical approach.⁹¹ Precedent regarding section 921(a)(33)(A)'s force clause also does not always apply to other force clauses; twice, the Supreme Court has treated section 921(a)(33)(A) differently from the ACCA's "violent felony" definition due to differences in wording and purpose of the statutes.⁹²

Appendix A in the Guidelines Manual references section 922(g)(9) offenses to §2K2.1 (Unlawful Receipt, Possession, or Transportation of Firearms or Ammunition; Prohibited Transactions Involving Firearms or Ammunition).⁹³ That guideline provides for higher base offense levels if a defendant has sustained one or two or more prior felony convictions for either a "crime of violence" or a "controlled substance offense."⁹⁴

3. 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) (Use of a Firearm During a Crime of Violence or Drug Trafficking Offense)

Section 924(c) makes it unlawful for an individual to possess, brandish, or discharge a firearm "during and in relation to any crime of violence or drug trafficking crime"; this crime carries mandatory consecutive penalties between five years and life depending on the type of firearm possessed, how the firearm was used, and whether the defendant was ⁸⁹ 18 U.S.C. 921(a)(33)(A)(ii).

⁹⁰ United States v. Hayes, 555 U.S. 415, 426 (2009).

⁹¹ United States v. Castleman, 572 U.S. 157, 168 (2014).

⁹² Compare Castleman, 572 U.S. at 163–68 (the term "physical force" in § 921(a)(33)(A) is satisfied by the common-law battery definition), with Johnson v. United States, 559 U.S. 133, 139–40 (2010) (rejecting the common-law definition of battery for the term "violent felony" in the ACCA), and Stokeling v. United States, 139 S. Ct. 544, 553 (2019) (same). Compare Voisine v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 2272, 2280 (2016) (crimes with a mens rea of recklessness may constitute a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence), with Leocal v. Ashcroft, 543 U.S. 1, 9 (2004) (18 U.S.C. § 16(a)'s force clause requires "a higher degree of intent than negligent or merely accidental conduct"), and Borden v. United States, 141 S. Ct. 1817, 1825 (2021) (plurality opinion) (recklessness does not satisfy the ACCA's force clause, and stating in dicta it would not satisfy 18 U.S.C. § 16(a), either). But see Borden, 141 S. Ct. at 1835 (Thomas, J., concurring in the judgment) (providing the necessary fifth vote in Borden but reasoning that Voisine was wrongly decided).

⁹³ See USSG App. A (Statutory Index).

⁹⁴ See USSG §2K2.1(a)(1)–(4).

previously convicted of an offense under section 924(c).⁹⁵ A drug trafficking crime is a felony “punishable under the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), or chapter 705 of title 46.”⁹⁶ A “crime of violence” is defined as a felony which “has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another.”⁹⁷

Appendix A in the Guidelines Manual references section 924(c) offenses to §2K2.4 (Use of Firearm, Armor-Piercing Ammunition, or Explosive During or in Relation to Certain Crimes).⁹⁸

4. 18 U.S.C. § 2252 (Prior Sex Offense Convictions)

Section 2252(a) makes it unlawful for an individual to knowingly transport, ship, transmit, distribute, receive, reproduce, sell, or possess child pornography. Typically, offenses under section 2252(a) receive penalties of between five and twenty years’ imprisonment for transporting, shipping, transmitting, receiving, reproducing, or selling child pornography, and up to ten years’ imprisonment for possessing child pornography.⁹⁹ However, section 2252(b) contains recidivist enhancements providing for a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment of fifteen years and maximum term of imprisonment of forty years for distribution of child pornography and a mandatory minimum term of ten years and maximum term of imprisonment of twenty years for possessing child pornography if a defendant has a prior conviction for certain federal sexual offenses¹⁰⁰ or a prior conviction under any state law “relating to” a list of enumerated sexual offenses.¹⁰¹

The categorical approach is used to determine whether state convictions “relating to” enumerated sexual offenses qualify as predicates for the purposes of these enhancements. The wording of this statute implicates the way the categorical analysis is applied. For example, the Fourth Circuit held that the use of the phrase “relating to” here calls for a different application of the categorical approach where “the match need not be perfect” and the conduct only needs to “stand in some relation” to the enumerated offenses in the list.¹⁰²

⁹⁵ 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(1)(A)–(C).

⁹⁶ 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(2).

⁹⁷ 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(A). The definition of “crime of violence” also includes a residual clause (“that by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense,” 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(3)(B)), but in United States v. Davis, the Supreme Court held the residual clause is void for vagueness. 139 S. Ct. 2319, 2336 (2019); see supra note 32.

⁹⁸ See USSG App. A (Statutory Index).

⁹⁹ 18 U.S.C. § 2252(b).

¹⁰⁰ See 18 U.S.C. § 2252(b).

¹⁰¹ This provision includes state offenses “relating to aggravated sexual abuse, sexual abuse, or abusive sexual conduct involving a minor or ward.” Id.

¹⁰² United States v. Hardin, 998 F.3d 582, 588 (4th Cir. 2021) (“A different way of saying this is that the

Appendix A in the Guidelines Manual references section 2252 offenses to §2G2.2 (Trafficking in Material Involving the Sexual Exploitation of a Minor; Receiving Transporting, Shipping, Soliciting, or Advertising Material Involving the Sexual Exploitation of a Minor; Possessing Material Involving the Sexual Exploitation of a Minor with Intent to Traffic; Possessing Material Involving the Sexual Exploitation of a Minor).¹⁰³

5. 18 U.S.C. § 16 (Crime of Violence Defined)

Numerous criminal statutes in the United States Code reference the “crime of violence” definition found in 18 U.S.C. § 16(a), which provides¹⁰⁴:

The term ‘crime of violence’ means an offense that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property¹⁰⁵ of another.¹⁰⁶

Several statutes reference the definition in section 16.¹⁰⁷ Notably, the “safety valve” provision at 18 U.S.C. § 3553(f), which allows a court to impose a sentence below the mandatory minimum for certain controlled substance offenses, now requires that a defendant seeking such relief must not have a prior 2-point “violent offense” under the guidelines.¹⁰⁸ The phrase “violent offense,” in turn, means a “crime of violence” as defined in section 16(a).¹⁰⁹ inclusion of ‘relating to’ means we apply the categorical approach ‘and then some.’”)

¹⁰³ See USSG App. A (Statutory Index).

¹⁰⁴ In Sessions v. Dimaya, the Supreme Court held section 16(b), which contains a residual clause, is unconstitutionally void for vagueness. 138 S. Ct. 1204 (2018); see supra note 32. Section 16(a) remains in effect and is analyzed using the categorical approach.

¹⁰⁵ This definition, unlike some of the definitions discussed in this section, includes crimes involving force against property, not just against an individual.

¹⁰⁶ This definition had its origin in the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 (“CCA”), which repealed a previous definition of the term “crime of violence.” Pub. L. No. 98-473, 98 Stat. 1976, 2136. The legislative history to the CCA states that while the term “crime of violence” was “occasionally used in present law, it is not defined, and no body of case law has arisen with respect to it.” Rep. No. 98-225, at 307 (1983), reprinted in 1984 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3182, 3486.

¹⁰⁷ See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 25 (use of minors in crimes of violence), 119 (release of personal information of certain people with the intent to incite the commission of a crime of violence), 3663A (Mandatory Victims Restitution Act); 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(7) (penalty enhancement for selling drugs with the intent to commit a crime of violence). In addition to criminal law, section 16 also is referenced in the immigration and bankruptcy contexts. See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. §§ 1101(a)(43), 1227(a)(2)(A)(iii), (E)(i) (Grounds for deportation); 11 U.S.C. § 707(c) (Grounds for dismissal of a bankruptcy case); 18 U.S.C. § 3181 (authorizing extradition of foreign nationals who have committed crimes of violence in other countries).

¹⁰⁸ 18 U.S.C. § 3553(f)(1)(C).

¹⁰⁹ See First Step Act of 2018, Pub. L. No. 115-391, § 402, 132 Stat. 5194, 5221.

6. Violent Crimes in Aid of Racketeering Activity (VICAR)

At least one court has held that the categorical approach does not apply to determining whether an offense qualifies as the enumerated federal offense of assault with a dangerous weapon in the “violent crimes in aid of racketeering activity” (VICAR) statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1959.¹¹⁰ However, the court cautioned that it was not considering whether the categorical approach would apply in analyzing the rest of the VICAR statute, specifically the portion prohibiting the act of threatening to commit a “crime of violence.”¹¹¹

7. Drug Offenses

Circuits also have applied the categorical approach to the determination of whether the defendant has applicable prior convictions for purposes of 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(B), which provides for heightened penalties if the instant offense followed convictions for a “serious drug felony” or “serious violent felony.”¹¹² The Second, Seventh, and Eighth Circuits have explicitly held that the categorical approach applies to section 841(b)(1)(B).¹¹³ The First, Third, and Ninth Circuits also have applied the categorical approach to the “felony drug offense” definition, though without explanation.¹¹⁴ However, the Sixth Circuit, in an unpublished opinion and without explanation, did not apply the categorical approach to felony drug offenses.¹¹⁵

B. GUIDELINES WHERE COURTS HAVE APPLIED THE CATEGORICAL APPROACH

As noted above, although the guidelines do not call for use of the categorical approach, and the Supreme Court has not held that the categorical approach applies to the guidelines, every circuit has, by analogy, applied the categorical approach to several guideline provisions.¹¹⁶ ¹¹⁰ United States v. Keene, 955 F.3d 391, 393 (4th Cir. 2020).

¹¹¹ Id. at 396–97.

¹¹² 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(B). Section 960, title 21 of the United States Code uses the same penalty structure as section 841. Although courts have not yet considered the issue, the logic behind applying the categorical approach to section 841 would suggest it applies to section 960 as well.

¹¹³ United States v. Thompson, 961 F.3d 545, 549–52 (2d Cir. 2020); United States v. Elder, 900 F.3d 491, 501 (7th Cir. 2018); United States v. Brown, 598 F.3d 1013, 1017 (8th Cir. 2010).

¹¹⁴ United States v. Aviles, 938 F.3d 503, 511 (3d Cir. 2019); United States v. Ocampo-Estrada, 873 F.3d 661, 667 (9th Cir. 2017); United States v. Brown, 500 F.3d 48, 59 (1st Cir. 2007).

¹¹⁵ United States v. Soto, 8 F. App’x 535, 541 (6th Cir. 2001).

¹¹⁶ E.g., United States v. Rabb, 942 F.3d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 2019); United States v. Scott, 990 F.3d 94, 104 (2d Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 142 S. Ct. 397 (2021); United States v. Bullock, 970 F.3d 210, 214–15 (3d Cir. 2020); United States v. Carthorne, 726 F.3d 503, 511 (4th Cir. 2013); United States v. Zuniga, 860 F.3d 276, 284 (5th Cir. 2017); United States v. Camp, 903 F.3d 594, 599 (6th Cir. 2018); Adams v. United States, 911 F.3d 397, 405 (7th Cir. 2018); United States v. Brown, 1 F.4th 617, 619–20 (8th Cir. 2021); United States v. Barragan, 871 F.3d 689, 713–14 (9th Cir. 2017); United States v. Ontiveros, 875 F.3d 533, 535 (10th Cir. 2017); United

1. Sections 4B1.1 and 4B1.2 (Career Offender Guideline and Definitions)

Section 4B1.1 provides for an enhanced offense level and criminal history category if: (1) the defendant was at least 18 years old at the time the defendant committed the instant offense of conviction; (2) the instant offense is a felony that is a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense”; and (3) the defendant has at least two prior felony convictions of either a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense.”¹¹⁷ The terms “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” are defined in §4B1.2.

“Crime of violence” is defined as:

any offense under federal or state law, punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, that (1) has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another, or (2) is murder, voluntary manslaughter, kidnapping, aggravated assault, a forcible sex offense, robbery, arson, extortion, or the use or unlawful possession of a firearm described in 26 U.S.C § 5845(a) or explosive material as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 841(c).¹¹⁸

“Controlled substance offense” is defined as:

an offense under federal or state law, punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute or dispense.¹¹⁹

Courts have used the categorical approach to determine whether a defendant’s instant conviction and prior convictions fall under either of these definitions. These definitions also are referenced in other guidelines, most notably in §2K2.1, which increases the guideline range for defendants who commit firearms offenses after a prior conviction for a “crime of violence” or “controlled substance offense.”¹²⁰

The Commentary to §4B1.2, Application Note 1, provides that the definitions of “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” include the offenses of conspiring, States v. Gandy, 917 F.3d 1333, 1339 (11th Cir. 2019); United States v. Sheffield, 832 F.3d 296, 314 (D.C. Cir. 2016).

¹¹⁷ USSG §4B1.1(a). The career offender guidelines implement Congress’s directive found at 28 U.S.C. § 994(h). See USSG §4B1.1, comment. (backg’d).

¹¹⁸ USSG §4B1.2(a).

¹¹⁹ USSG §4B1.2(b).

¹²⁰ USSG §2K2.1(a)(1)–(4).

aiding and abetting, and attempting to commit such offenses.¹²¹ As discussed infra, circuit courts are split regarding the validity of Application Note 1, namely, whether §4B1.2(b)'s definition of "controlled substance offense" includes inchoate offenses that are not listed in the guideline text.¹²²

2. Section 2L1.2 (Illegal Reentry)

Courts may use the categorical approach for §2L1.2(b)(2)(E) and (b)(3)(E), which provide for a 2-level enhancement if, before or after a defendant was ordered deported or removed from the United States for the first time, the defendant engaged in criminal conduct that resulted in three or more convictions for misdemeanors that are "crimes of violence or drug trafficking offenses."¹²³ Similar to the definition of "crime of violence" in §4B1.2,¹²⁴ the Commentary to §2L1.2 explains that "crime of violence":

means any of the following offenses under federal, state, or local law: murder, voluntary manslaughter, kidnapping, aggravated assault, a forcible sex offense, robbery, arson, extortion, the use or unlawful possession of a firearm described in 26 U.S.C. § 5845(a) or explosive material as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 841(c), or any other offense under federal, state, or local law that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another.

Similar to the definition of "controlled substance offense" in §4B1.2, the commentary explains that "drug trafficking offense":

means an offense under federal, state, or local law that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of, or offer to sell a controlled substance (or counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute, or dispense.¹²⁵

¹²¹ USSG §4B1.2, comment. (n.1).

¹²² Compare, e.g., United States v. Havis, 927 F.3d 382, 385–87 (6th Cir. 2019) (en banc) (Application Note 1 is invalid), with United States v. Adams, 934 F.3d 720, 729 (7th Cir. 2019) (Application Note 1 is valid). See infra note 138 (contains further cases on either side of this split).

¹²³ USSG §2L1.2(b)(2)(E), (3)(E). Before 2016, §2L1.2 also provided for an increase to a defendant's base offense level if the defendant was previously deported or remained in the United States after sustaining certain types of prior convictions, including "crimes of violence" and "drug trafficking offenses." Courts applied the categorical approach to determine whether a prior offense fell within one of those definitions. In 2016, the Commission promulgated a comprehensive amendment to §2L1.2 that eliminated, with very limited exceptions, the categorical approach for determining whether a prior conviction qualifies for a particular enhancement under that guideline. See USSG App. C, amend. 802 (effective Nov. 1, 2016) (explaining in its Reason for Amendment that "[i]nstead of the categorical approach, the amendment adopts a much simpler sentence-imposed model for determining the applicability of predicate convictions").

¹²⁴ While the career offender definitions describe convictions punishable by over a year of imprisonment, these enhancements are specifically targeted at misdemeanors.

¹²⁵ USSG §2L1.2, comment. (n.2).

3. Section 7B1.1 (Grade of Violations)

Chapter Seven, Part B (Violations of Probation and Supervised Release) sets forth procedures for determining whether a defendant has violated supervised release or probation and, if so, for imposing sentence. Courts have wrestled with whether the categorical approach applies to the definition of “Grade A Violations” under §7B1.1.¹²⁶ Under §7B1.1(a)(1), Grade A violations—the most serious grade—are defined, among other things, as “conduct constituting (A) a federal, state, or local offense punishable by a term of imprisonment exceeding one year that (i) is a crime of violence, or (ii) is a controlled substance offense.”¹²⁷ The commentary defines “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” by reference to the definitions in the career offender guideline at §4B1.2.¹²⁸

The circuits disagree about whether the “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” determination in §7B1.1 should be evaluated using the categorical approach, given the reference to §4B1.2 (which courts analyze using the categorical approach), or a conduct-based approach, given the presence of the phrase “conduct constituting.”

The Fourth Circuit has stated that the “familiar” categorical approach applies to the “crime of violence” determination under §7B1.1(a), holding that a defendant’s North Carolina assault conviction was not categorically a “crime of violence” for purposes of his supervised release violation.¹²⁹ The First, Third, and Ninth Circuits have adopted a “hybrid” approach to §7B1.1(a).¹³⁰ Under this approach, the government must take two steps to demonstrate a Grade A violation.¹³¹ First, the government must identify some qualifying offense that is a crime of violence or a controlled substance offense under the categorical approach (but not necessarily a statute that the defendant was convicted under).¹³² Second, the government then need only show that the defendant actually committed (i.e., his “conduct constituted”) that crime’s elements, regardless of whether he was convicted of that offense.¹³³ In making this assessment, the court may look beyond Shepard documents

¹²⁶ See USSG §7B1.1(a) (providing three grades of probation and supervised release violations in descending tiers of seriousness, from Grade A to Grade C).

¹²⁷ Id. (emphasis added).

¹²⁸ USSG §7B1.1, comment. (n.2).

¹²⁹ See United States v. Simmons, 917 F.3d 312, 316–17, 320–21 (4th Cir. 2019).

¹³⁰ United States v. Garcia-Cartagena, 953 F.3d 14, 22 (1st Cir. 2020) (citing United States v. Willis, 795 F.3d 986, 992–94 (9th Cir. 2015), and United States v. Carter, 730 F.3d 187, 192–93 (3d Cir. 2013)). Although the Carter court stated that the categorical approach “does not apply” in the revocation context, its statement, in context, was explaining why uncharged conduct can form the basis of a supervised release violation and its analysis used the same hybrid approach of the First and Ninth Circuits. See Carter, 730 F.3d at 192.

¹³¹ Garcia-Cartagena, 953 F.3d at 21.

¹³² Id. at 22–24.

¹³³ Id. at 24–25.

and may consider any evidence admissible in revocation hearings.¹³⁴ As the Ninth Circuit explained, the court in a supervised release context only needs “to identify a statutory offense for which the defendant could have been convicted,” though the categorical analysis of whether that offense qualifies is the same.¹³⁵

By contrast, the Second, Seventh, and Eighth Circuits have held that the categorical approach does not apply to §7B1.1(a), evaluating whether the defendant’s conduct alone meets the definitions in the career offender guideline.¹³⁶

IV. CIRCUIT ISSUES

The categorical approach has been the subject of much litigation over the years. This section highlights selected issues involving application of the categorical approach.

A. INCHOATE OFFENSES

Even if a substantive offense meets a given federal definition under the categorical approach, difficulties may arise where a defendant was convicted of attempting or conspiring to violate the substantive offense.¹³⁷ This section discusses circuit conflicts that have developed surrounding inchoate offenses.

1. Application Note 1 to USSG §4B1.2

The Commentary to §4B1.2, Application Note 1, provides that “crime of violence” and “controlled substance offense” include the offenses of conspiring, aiding and abetting, and attempting to commit such offenses. Circuits are split regarding whether Application Note 1’s inclusion of inchoate crimes in the definition of “controlled substance offense” is an invalid expansion of the career offender definition in the text.¹³⁸ The Third, Sixth, and ¹³⁴ Id.

¹³⁵ Willis, 795 F.3d at 993.

¹³⁶ United States v. Golden, 843 F.3d 1162, 1166–67 (7th Cir. 2016) (defendant committed a Grade A violation because his conduct involved “physical force”); United States v. Schwab, 85 F.3d 326, 327 (8th Cir. 1996) (the district court properly looked to the defendant’s conduct to determine the grade of his supervised release violation); United States v. Cawley, 48 F.3d 90, 93 (2d Cir. 1995) (defendant’s conduct constituted the “threatened use of physical force”); see also United States v. Pitt, 739 F. App’x 353, 354–55 (8th Cir. 2018) (citing Schwab in rejecting defendant’s argument that the categorical approach applies to §7B1.1(a)).

¹³⁷ An exception to this general issue is the ACCA’s drug offense provision, which includes offenses “involving” certain conduct relating to controlled substances. Courts have held that the word “involving” broadens the ACCA to include inchoate crimes. See, e.g., United States v. Ojeda, 951 F.3d 66, 75 (2d Cir. 2020) (“‘involving’ reasonably identifies inchoate as well as substantive drug crimes”).

¹³⁸ Compare United States v. Nasir, 17 F.4th 459, 469–72 (3d Cir. 2021) (en banc) (inchoate crimes are not included in the guideline; Application Note 1 was not binding), United States v. Havis, 927 F.3d 382, 385–87 (6th Cir. 2019) (en banc) (Application Note 1 is invalid), and United States v. Winstead, 890 F.3d 1082, 1091 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (same), with United States v. Jefferson, 975 F.3d 700, 708 (8th Cir. 2020) (upholding

D.C. Circuits have held that because the main text of the guideline does not explicitly mention “attempt” offenses in defining “controlled substance offense,” Application Note 1 cannot add attempt offenses to the definition via the commentary.¹³⁹ The First, Second, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Circuits, however, have held that Application Note 1 is binding.¹⁴⁰ The Seventh Circuit, for example, explained that Application Note 1 did not conflict with the main guideline text “because the text of §4B1.2(a) does not tell us, one [way] or another, whether inchoate offense[s] are included or excluded.”¹⁴¹

2. Conspiracy and Attempt Offenses

Courts apply the categorical approach to determine whether an instant or prior conviction for a substantive offense qualifies as a “crime of violence” or “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2. The circuits are split, however, on whether the categorical approach applies to determine whether inchoate offenses qualify separately as predicate offenses under §4B1.2.

a. Conspiracy

Courts have applied the categorical approach to determine whether conspiracy offenses qualify as predicate offenses under §4B1.2. Some, but not all, courts have held that the generic definition of conspiracy requires proof of an overt act and, therefore, conspiracy statutes that do not contain an “overt act” requirement are categorically excluded as from qualifying as a “crime of violence” or a “controlled substance offense,” even though the substantive crime is a crime of violence or a controlled substance offense.¹⁴² As a result, there is a circuit split regarding whether conspiracy offenses, such as Application Note 1 based on prior precedent), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 2820 (2021), United States v. Lewis, 963 F.3d 16, 23–25 (1st Cir. 2020) (holding “that the case for finding the prior panels would have reached a different result today” about the validity of Application Note 1 “is not so obviously correct as to allow this panel to decree that the prior precedent is no longer good law in this circuit”), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 2826 (2021), United States v. Richardson, 958 F.3d 151, 154–55 (2d Cir.) (Application Note 1 is valid and consistent with the guideline text of §4B1.2), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 423 (2020), United States v. Adams, 934 F.3d 720, 729 (7th Cir. 2019) (same), and United States v. Crum, 934 F.3d 963, 966 (9th Cir. 2019) (upholding Application Note 1 based on prior precedent). Thus, sentencing courts in the circuits applying the reasoning in Nasir, Havis, and Winstead should be aware that inchoate versions of career offender predicates will not qualify under that commentary and can only qualify under the main text in the guideline. See United States v. Cavazos, 950 F.3d 329, 336–37 (6th Cir. 2020) (applying Havis to hold that a state statute that amounted to attempted distribution does not qualify as a “controlled substance offense”).

¹³⁹ Nasir, 17 F.4th 469–72; Havis, 927 F.3d at 385–87; Winstead, 890 F.3d at 1090–92. No circuit called into doubt the inclusion of attempt offenses in §4B1.2’s definition of “crime of violence”; the attempt definition appears in the main guideline text. Nasir, 17 F.4th at 471; Havis, 927 F.3d at 386; Winstead, 890 F.3d at 1091 n.12.

¹⁴⁰ Jefferson, 975 F.3d at 708; Lewis, 963 F.3d at 23–25; Richardson, 958 F.3d at 154–55; Adams, 934 F.3d at 729; Crum, 934 F.3d at 966.

¹⁴¹ Adams, 934 F.3d at 729 (quoting United States v. Raupp, 677 F.3d 756, 759 (7th Cir. 2012), overruled on other grounds by United States v. Rollins, 836 F.3d 737, 743 (7th Cir. 2016)).

¹⁴² See United States v. McCollum, 885 F.3d 300, 308 (4th Cir. 2018) (“An overt act is an element of the conspiracy to murder in aid of racketeering, require an “overt act” as an element of the offense to qualify as a predicate offense under §4B1.2.¹⁴³

Additionally, several circuits have held that conspiracy to commit Hobbs Act robbery does not satisfy the elements clause of section 924(c) because it only requires an agreement to commit Hobbs Act robbery.¹⁴⁴ For the same reason, the Eleventh Circuit also held that RICO conspiracy does not meet the elements clause.¹⁴⁵

However, the Fourth Circuit held that federal conspiracy to use facilities of commerce with intent that a murder would be committed for hire (18 U.S.C. § 1958(a)) necessarily requires the use of physical force even if conspiracy alone does not implicate the use of force.¹⁴⁶ The court reasoned that conspiracy in the context of a section 1958 offense “is different because it has heightened mens rea elements [the intent to join the conspiracy and the specific intent that a murder be committed for hire], as well as the element that ‘death results.’ ”¹⁴⁷ The court explained that the death resulting from a conspiracy to commit murder for hire meets the necessary mens rea requirement and noted that it had previously held that an act that results in death “obviously” requires physical force.¹⁴⁸ Similarly, the First Circuit held that while conspiracies ordinarily are not generic definition of conspiracy”). But see United States v. Rodriguez-Rivera, 989 F.3d 183, 187 (1st Cir. 2021) (rejecting the argument that “conspiring” under Application Note 1 requires adopting a generic version of conspiracy).

¹⁴³ Compare United States v. Norman, 935 F.3d 232, 237–39 (4th Cir. 2019) (conspiracy to possess cocaine and cocaine base with intent to distribute, in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846, is not a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2(b) because there is no overt act requirement), McCollum, 885 F.3d at 307–08 (conspiracy to murder in aid of racketeering, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1959(a)(5), is not a “crime of violence” for career offender because statute does not require an overt act), United States v. Martinez-Cruz, 836 F.3d 1305, 1314 (10th Cir. 2016) (conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute fifty kilograms or more of marijuana, in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846, is not an “aggravated felony” drug trafficking offense for purposes of §2L1.2), with United States v. Lewis, 963 F.3d 16, 26–27 (1st Cir. 2020) (recognizing circuit split, but concluding that district court did not plainly err in finding that conspiracy to distribute cocaine under 21 U.S.C. § 846 is a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2(b)), and United States v. Tabb, 949 F.3d 81, 86–89 (2d Cir. 2020) (disagreeing with the Fourth Circuit and concluding that conspiracy to distribute and possess with intent to distribute crack cocaine in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846 is a “controlled substance offense” under §4B1.2(b)).

¹⁴⁴ See Brown v. United States, 942 F.3d 1069, 1075 (11th Cir. 2019); United States v. Barrett, 937 F.3d 126, 127 (2d Cir. 2019); United States v. Simms, 914 F.3d 229, 233 (4th Cir. 2019) (en banc); United States v. Lewis, 907 F.3d 891, 894 (5th Cir. 2018).

¹⁴⁵ United States v. Green, 981 F.3d 945, 952 (11th Cir. 2020) (RICO conspiracy is not a “crime of violence” under section 924(c)’s elements clause); see also United States v. Khweis, 971 F.3d 453, 464 (4th Cir. 2020) (conspiracy to provide material support to ISIL does not satisfy § 924(c)’s elements clause).

¹⁴⁶ United States v. Runyon, 994 F.3d 192, 203 (4th Cir. 2021).

¹⁴⁷ Id.

¹⁴⁸ Id. (while the “mens rea elements are not explicitly tied to the resulting-in-death element, in any realistic case, they must nonetheless carry forward” to that element).

violent felonies, the presence of a “death results” element in the offense that is the object of the conspiracy can bring a federal conspiracy under the purview of the elements clause.¹⁴⁹

b. Attempt

Some courts have held that generic attempt requires a substantial step towards commission of the substantive offense.¹⁵⁰ Even when a statute encompasses attempt with a substantial step requirement, such as Hobbs Act robbery, circuits are split on whether attempt offenses, such as attempted Hobbs Act robbery, meet the elements clause. An attempted Hobbs Act robbery requires the specific intent to commit Hobbs Act robbery and a substantial step towards the commission of that offense.¹⁵¹ The Third, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits have held that attempted Hobbs Act robbery categorically satisfies the force clause.¹⁵² In so deciding, these courts have held that when a substantive offense would be a crime of violence under § 924(c)(3)(A), an attempt to commit that offense also is a crime of violence.¹⁵³ However, the Fourth Circuit has held that attempted Hobbs Act robbery does not satisfy the force clause because when a defendant takes a “nonviolent substantial step toward threatening to use physical force . . . the defendant has not used, attempted to use, or threatened to use physical force.”¹⁵⁴ Instead, the Fourth Circuit held, the defendant merely has “attempted to threaten” to use physical force.¹⁵⁵ The Supreme Court has granted a writ of certiorari to resolve this circuit split.¹⁵⁶

B. DIFFERENCES IN BREADTH OF THE ACCA’S AND §4B1.2’S DRUG OFFENSE PROVISIONS

Although the ACCA’s definition of “serious drug offense” and §4B1.2’s definition of “controlled substance offense” are similar and often have been analyzed interchangeably, ¹⁴⁹ United States v. Tsarnaev, 968 F.3d 24, 104 (1st Cir. 2020), cert. granted on other grounds, 141 S. Ct. 1683 (2021).

¹⁵⁰ E.g., United States v. Tabb, 949 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 2020) (generic attempt comprises criminal intent and completion of a substantial step); United States v. Dozier, 848 F.3d 180, 186 (4th Cir. 2017) (same).

¹⁵¹ 18 U.S.C. §§ 1951(a) and 2; see, e.g., United States v. Dominguez, 954 F.3d 1251, 1255 (9th Cir. 2020) (“We agree with the Eleventh Circuit that attempted Hobbs Act robbery is a crime of violence . . . because its commission requires proof of both the specific intent to complete a crime of violence, and a substantial step actually (not theoretically) taken toward its completion.”), petition for cert. filed, No. 20-1000.

¹⁵² United States v. Walker, 990 F.3d 316, 325 (3d Cir. 2021), petition for cert. filed, No. 21-102; Dominguez, 954 F.3d at 1261; United States v. Ingram, 947 F.3d 1021, 1026 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 323 (2020); United States v. St. Hubert, 909 F.3d 335, 351 (11th Cir. 2018), abrogated in part on other grounds by United States v. Davis, 139 S. Ct. 2319 (2019)); see also United States v. Smith, 957 F.3d 590, 596 (5th Cir. 2020) (an attempt offense that includes the specific intent to commit a crime of violence and a substantial step in an effort to bring about the crime of violence is itself a crime of violence under the elements clause).

¹⁵³ See supra note 152.

¹⁵⁴ United States v. Taylor, 979 F.3d 203, 208 (4th Cir. 2020), cert. granted, 141 S. Ct. 2882 (2021).

¹⁵⁵ Id.

¹⁵⁶ United States v. Taylor, 141 S. Ct. 2882 (2021) (granting petition for writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit).

differences in key terms have given rise to circuit conflicts. The ACCA defines a “serious drug offense” as a violation of specific federal statutes or state offenses “involving manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance” carrying a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or greater,¹⁵⁷ while §4B1.2(b) defines a “controlled substance offense” as “an offense under federal or state law” carrying a maximum term of more than one year’s imprisonment “that prohibits the manufacture, import, export, distribution, or dispensing of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) or the possession of a controlled substance (or a counterfeit substance) with intent to manufacture, import, export, distribute, or dispense.”¹⁵⁸ This section discusses three specific issues regarding these definitions.

1. “Involving” v. “Prohibits”

Some courts have held that the ACCA’s use of the word “involving” generally broadens its scope beyond the substantive terms that follow.¹⁵⁹ Courts have not clarified the extent of that broadening effect, though some have cautioned that the plain meaning of “involving” still requires a relationship to its substantive terms that is not too “remote or tangential.”¹⁶⁰ Courts have not applied the same broadening effect to §4B1.2’s definition of “controlled substance offense.”¹⁶¹ For instance, the Fifth Circuit has held that a Texas drug statute qualifies as a “serious drug offense” under the ACCA, citing specifically to the word “involving” in the ACCA, while also noting that circuit precedent held that it did not qualify as a “drug trafficking offense” under the then-illegal reentry guideline at §2L1.2, which used the word “prohibits.”¹⁶²

2. Conduct or Generic Offenses

Before 2020, circuit courts disagreed about whether the ACCA’s definition of “serious drug offense” required comparing state statutes to a generic offense (as with burglary in the ACCA’s enumerated offense clause) or conduct (as with force in the ACCA’s ¹⁵⁷ 18 U.S.C § 924(e)(2)(A).

¹⁵⁸ USSG §4B1.2(b).

¹⁵⁹ See, e.g., United States v. Daniels, 915 F.3d 148, 153 (3d Cir. 2019); United States v. White, 837 F.3d 1225, 1235 (11th Cir. 2016); United States v. Vickers, 540 F.3d 356, 364–65 (5th Cir. 2008); United States v. McKenney, 450 F.3d 39, 42–44 (1st Cir. 2006).

¹⁶⁰ See, e.g., United States v. Gibbs, 656 F.3d 180, 185 (3d Cir. 2011) (quoting McKenney, 450 F.3d at 45).

¹⁶¹ See White, 837 F.3d at 1235 (“[T]here is general agreement among the circuits that the ACCA’s definition of a serious drug offense is broader than the guidelines definition of a drug trafficking . . . offense because of the ACCA’s use of the term ‘involving.’”).

¹⁶² Vickers, 540 F.3d at 364–65 (citing and quoting United States v. Gonzales, 484 F.3d 712 (5th Cir. 2007)).

force clause).¹⁶³ In Shular v. United States,¹⁶⁴ the Supreme Court resolved this split as to the ACCA, holding that section 924(e)(2)(A)(ii)'s definition of "serious drug offense" requires only that "the state offenses involve the conduct specified in the federal statute; it does not require that the state offense match certain generic offenses."¹⁶⁵ The Court relied on two features of the ACCA's text in reaching this conclusion: (1) the terms used were "unlikely names for generic offenses"; and (2) the ACCA used the term "involves" rather than the term "is" in defining the offenses covered.¹⁶⁶ Because Shular applied to the ACCA, and because the guidelines text is different, Shular does not necessarily resolve this issue with regard to the guidelines.

The Eleventh Circuit previously had held that the guidelines, like the ACCA, require a conduct-based comparison.¹⁶⁷ The Eleventh Circuit subsequently held in unpublished decisions that Shular did not alter this conclusion, and it has applied Shular to the guidelines in at least one published opinion.¹⁶⁸ Also post-Shular, the Fourth Circuit concluded that Shular required §4B1.2's drug offense provision be read as a conduct-based definition.¹⁶⁹ In a concurring opinion, however, one judge on that panel determined that Shular's reasoning compelled the opposite conclusion in the guidelines context—that §4B1.2's drug offense provision requires "match[ing] the elements of state drug offenses to their federal counterpart."¹⁷⁰ The Fifth Circuit previously distinguished between a drug offense provision in the guidelines materially identical to that in §4B1.2 and the ACCA, stating the guidelines provision "lists specific convictions (e.g., manufacture, import)" while the ACCA applied only to convictions involving certain conduct.¹⁷¹ The Fifth Circuit has yet to discuss the validity of this reasoning post-Shular.

¹⁶³ Compare United States v. Franklin, 904 F.3d 793, 800 (9th Cir. 2018) (requiring comparison to a generic crime), with United States v. Smith, 775 F.3d 1262, 1267 (11th Cir. 2014) ("We need not search for the elements of 'generic' definitions of 'serious drug offense' and 'controlled substance offense' because these terms are defined by a federal statute and the Sentencing Guidelines, respectively.").

¹⁶⁴ 140 S. Ct. 779 (2020).

¹⁶⁵ Id. at 782.

¹⁶⁶ Id. at 785.

¹⁶⁷ Smith, 775 F.3d at 1267.

¹⁶⁸ United States v. Bates, 960 F.3d 1278, 1293 (11th Cir. 2020) (applying Shular to the guidelines); United States v. Hunter, 823 F. App'x 824, 828 (11th Cir. 2020) (Smith remains good law after Shular); United States v. Miller, 806 F. App'x 963, 964–65 (11th Cir.) (same), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 432 (2020); United States v. Campbell, 816 F. App'x 384, 386–87 (11th Cir. 2020) (same).

¹⁶⁹ United States v. Ward, 972 F.3d 364, 365 n.2 (4th Cir. 2020).

¹⁷⁰ Id. at 376 n.2 (Gregory, C.J., concurring in the judgment).

¹⁷¹ See United States v. Vickers, 540 F.3d 356, 365 (5th Cir. 2008) (referring to the definition of "drug trafficking offense" in the Commentary to §2L1.2 that mirrors the definition of "controlled substance offense" in §4B1.2(b)).

3. Offers to Sell a Controlled Substance

The difference in circuits' interpretation of "involving" (ACCA) and "prohibits" (§4B1.2(b)) has also resulted in a circuit conflict specifically related to whether a statute that encompasses an "offer to sell" a controlled substance qualifies as a "controlled substance offense" under the guidelines. The First, Fifth, and Eighth Circuits have held that state statutes that criminalize "offers to sell" qualify under the expansive language of "involving" in the ACCA's definition of a "serious drug offense."¹⁷² On the other hand, the Second, Fifth, Sixth, and Tenth Circuits have held that because §4B1.2(b)'s definition of a "controlled substance offense" does not include "offers to sell," state statutes that criminalize "offers to sell" sweep more broadly than the guidelines definition and are not "controlled substance offenses" under the guidelines.¹⁷³

¹⁷² See, e.g., United States v. Block, 935 F.3d 655, 656 (8th Cir. 2019) (prior conviction for delivery of a controlled substance under Texas drug statute, which defines "deliver" to include offering to sell a controlled substance, is "related to or connected with" manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute in the ACCA's definition of a "serious drug offense"); United States v. Whindleton, 797 F.3d 105, 111 (1st Cir. 2015) (New York drug statute that encompasses an offer to sell drugs is sufficiently related to distribution to qualify as a "serious drug offense" under the ACCA based on the expansive language of "involving," even if the defendant never possesses the drugs and the offer is not accepted); United States v. Bynum, 669 F.3d 880, 886 (8th Cir. 2012) (the term "involving" is an expansive term that requires only that the prior Minnesota conviction be "related to or connected with" drug manufacture, distribution, or possession; concluding that "knowingly offering to sell drugs is a 'serious drug offense' under the ACCA"); Vickers, 540 F.3d at 364–66 (Texas drug statute that defines "deliver" to include offering to sell a controlled substance is sufficiently "related to or connected with" drug distribution to qualify as a "serious drug offense" under the ACCA).

¹⁷³ See, e.g., United States v. Cavazos, 950 F.3d 329, 334–37 (6th Cir. 2020) (prior conviction for possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance under Texas's drug statute not a "controlled substance offense" under §4B1.2(b), because "offering to sell" a controlled substance constitutes an "attempt," and "attempt" does not qualify as a "controlled substances offense" under §4B1.2(b) because the commentary impermissibly adds to the guidelines' definition); United States v. McKibbin, 878 F.3d 967, 971–72 (10th Cir. 2017) (prior state conviction for distribution of a controlled substance not a "controlled substance offense" because Colorado drug statute defines "sale" of a controlled substance to encompass an "offer to sell"); United States v. Madkins, 866 F.3d 1136, 1145 (10th Cir. 2017) (prior conviction for possession with intent to sell cocaine and marijuana is not a "controlled substance offense" because Kansas drug statute criminalizes "offer to sell" a controlled substance); United States v. Tanksley, 848 F.3d 347, 352 (5th Cir. 2017) (prior conviction for possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance is not a "controlled substance offense" for purposes of enhanced base offense level under §2K2.1 because Texas drug statute encompasses "offer to sell"); United States v. Hinkle, 832 F.3d 569, 571–72 (5th Cir. 2016) (prior conviction for delivery of heroin does not qualify as a "controlled substance offense" because Texas statute criminalizes conduct that include "offer to sell"); see also United States v. Savage, 542 F.3d 959, 964–66 (2d Cir. 2008) (prior conviction for drug sales does not qualify as a "controlled substance offense" because Connecticut statute criminalizes "offer to sell" a controlled substance), superseded as stated in Chery v. Garland, 16 F.4th 980, 984–85 (2d Cir. 2021) (explaining the Connecticut Supreme Court clarified, subsequent to Savage, that an offer requires constructive or attempted transfer).